Search continues for chemicals to prevent cancer

United Press International
SEATTLE — Researchers are changing tactics in the war against cancer by stepping up the effort to find chemicals that prevent it rather than trying to eliminate all the agents causing the disease.

A variety of substances such as beta carotene in carrots and selenium in most foods already are under investigation and scientists report an increasing number of other natural and synthetic chemicals are being studied as possible cancer preventers.

"I'm very excited about it," said Dr. Vincent DeVita, who as director of the government's National Cancer Institute is the head of the nation's effort against cancer.

"It seems to me we have a lot of information that suggests we're going to be able to interfere with cancer," he said Wednesday at a briefing at the 13th International Cancer Congress.

DeVita said the cancer institute has increased its support of such studies after "a little twisting and turning of our machinery to get it pointed in the right direction."

"Most of the emphasis in preceding decades was on removing the initiator from the environment," he said. "That turns out to be very difficult although it's a worthwhile attempt. It turns out there are many more things around that interfere with promotion (of cancer)."

Dr. Lee W. Wattenberg, professor of laboratory medicine at the University of said in an opening congress some preventing cancer press the cancer producers "simply block producing agent ting its target site."

He said his lab found two naturally constituents of appear to be able to cancer in rats. They palmitate and caffeine.

Wattenberg said still in the early stages the two compounds panorama of protection.

"It's as if you suddenly you had things coming about. They're extremely compounds."

But Wattenberg chers have not yet these chemicals for effects when used amounts.

"It's going to take time to find out implications are said.

"Once you find then you have to extensively to make not dealing with which might have apected toxic or ad effect."

An estimated 800 professionals from are expected to attend cer meeting. It runs next Wednesday and of 4,000 reports on all cancer will be present
