Bell tolls for author found dead

United Press International
MIAMI BEACH — The brother of author Ernest Hemingway, who shot himself to death 21 years ago, has also committed suicide, his eldest daughter said Tuesday.

Leicester Hemingway, 67, a writer and avid fisherman, was found dead in the front hallway of his Miami Beach home Monday, said his daughter, Anne Hemingway Feyer.

Feyer said her father suffered from diabetes and was depressed because of a series of recent operations.

"He was hospitalized about four times in the last 18 months," she said. "He was depressed because he thought would have to have more operations."

Her father was alone in a house and left no suicide note, she said. He shot himself with a handgun, Feyer said.

Hinckley views verdict as fair

United Press International
WASHINGTON — John W. Hinckley Jr., in an unsolicited letter to Newsweek magazine, opposes a major crime-fighting goal of the Reagan administration — curbing the insanity defense.

In the letter, Hinckley also wrote that after initial plea-bargaining with the Justice Department failed, he offered to plead guilty — but was rebuffed.

"Sending a John Hinckley to a mental hospital instead of prison is the American way," he wrote in the letter that appears in Newsweek's current issue.

Reagan, shot by Hinckley last year, is proposing to Congress a crime-fighting package. Among the proposals is one to alter the insanity defense that Hinckley successfully employed in his trial last spring.

Attorney General William French Smith, promoting the package Sunday on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," said the administration would like to eliminate insanity as a defense except to the degree that the intent necessary to establish the offense is lacking because of mental defect.

Hinckley was acquitted by reason of insanity last June in the March 30, 1981, shooting of Reagan and three others.

Hinckley wrote Newsweek that the insanity defense exists in the United States because "it is a compassionate and fair country."

He said the jurors who heard his case deserved the "Congressional Medal of Honor" for not bowing to public pressure and finding him guilty.

Admitting he is disturbed by the public uproar over the jury's verdict, Hinckley said it demonstrates "the vindictive nature of many Americans."

"I can only respond with a shake of my head and the wish that society will someday show some compassion for its disturbed outcasts," he wrote.

In his letter, Hinckley also discussed some of his pretrial legal efforts.

"In return for four concurrent life sentences and a parole possibility in 15 years I would have pleaded guilty," Hinckley wrote.

"Incredibly, the government turned this offer down. Even more astounding is the fact that I was not allowed to plead guilty without any sort of plea-bargain. By January of 1982, I was so tired of waiting for a trial that I wanted to plead guilty and put an end to the charade.

"I was informed that this proposal was unacceptable to the judge and Justice Department. So I waited and went to trial and was acquitted. The public outrage over the verdict should be directed at the government for forcing me to go to trial."

Now You Know

United Press International
The person who can put away four martinis at lunch and then put in a good afternoon's work is not necessarily a legend. Laboratory rats are telling us why.

Researchers at the Hahnemann Medical Center in Philadelphia found that brain cell membranes that have been exposed to a lot of alcohol become rigid and assimilate less booze. Alcoholic rats simply don't get as drunk on a given quantity of liquor.

Heavily exposed rats tolerate blood alcohol levels three to four times higher than normal, say biochemists Hagai Rottenberg and Alan Waring.
