Redheads form world club

United Press International
LAGUNA HILLS, Calif. — Red-haired people have reason to keep their carrot tops high.

Steve Douglas, a piano player who sold his $4,000 baby grand and other musical equipment to found Redheads International, is setting out on a campaign to promote red-haired pride.

Douglas has ordered red-head bumper stickers and membership cards along with T-shirts bearing the Redheads International logo.

He rented a cubbyhole office in Laguna Hills, in Orange County, and is gearing up for an Oct. 23 gathering of redheads.

Douglas, who quit his band to launch the club, said more than 1,000 redheads have responded to ads in several national and local publications, paying $10 each to join the club. He said several chapters have been formed.

Tacked on the bulletin board is a letter to "Dear Abby" from a man who complained he couldn't find a girl because of "the terrible curse of being a redhead." He asked if there was a club for redheads he could join.

Abby didn't know of any clubs, prompting Douglas to write a letter saying it wasn't a curse to be a redhead and told her about Redheads International.

"Did you know George Washington and Thomas Jefferson were redheads?" Douglas asked. Other famous red-haired people were Nero, Napoleon, Henry VIII, Winston Churchill, Sarah Bernhardt and Mark Twain.

Leaves

A. Phillips, who administers the Faculty Academic Study Program, emphasized that a program that only can fund four development leaves a year is far too small for a university the size of Texas A&M.

"Only 15 people applied for leaves this year," Phillips said. "Word was out on the streets that there wasn't much money for the program. So most people figured they didn't have a chance and didn't apply."

The "word on the streets" said the amount of money available for faculty development leaves had been cut in half. The Association of Former Students withdrew its support this year after increasing the number and amount of achievement awards it presents to faculty. The Development Foundation now provides sole support for the program, contributing about $93,500 a year.

Part of the problem of obtaining funds, from either private or public sources, for development leaves can be attributed to an image problem, Phillips said.

"The concept of the faculty development leave, at least in this state, has apparently taken on something of an unfortunate connotation," he said. "Legislators and perhaps others, perhaps even members of the Association of Former Students, have assumed that ... the professor is given a semester off to do nothing, which is absolutely and totally opposite of what is really intended to be the function of this program."

"(A leave) isn't a time to go sit under a tree and look at the birds. It's a time to refresh yourself, renew yourself by study, by writing, by taking a fresh look at your field or at new fields of interest. It ... gives a faculty member an opportunity to recharge his or her batteries."

Development leaves aren't the only means available for faculty members who wish to take a leave from the University. Employees may accept grants for study, research or travel from the government, industries, corporations or foundations.

But a university's image is tied in with its leave program, Phillips said. The lack of an extensive program could harm a university's chances of recruiting faculty, he said.

"It's a deterrent to a faculty member who has it (a leave program) elsewhere to come to an institution that doesn't have one," Phillips said. "So he thinks twice about making a move."

One person who could be thinking twice about making a move to Texas A&M is Nobel Prize-winner Dr. Sheldon Glashow of Harvard University.

In 1979, Glashow shared a Nobel Prize in physics with two other men for contributions to a unified theory of interactions, which deals with forces like gravity, electromagnetics and the forces that bond atoms.

Glashow will receive a year-long sabbatical from Harvard in September 1983. During his sabbatical, University officials want him to come to Texas A&M as a visiting professor, Phillips said. Glashow has not announced whether he will come to Texas A&M.

"We want to bring him and one of his bright, young proteges down here if we can," Phillips said. "But we ought to have a program to attract that kind of person to stay because if we don't, we aren't going to get that sort of fellow."
