Presbyterians vote to place emphasis on peacemaking

United Press International "Peacemaking" is central to the Christian gospel, according to a survey of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and good-sized percentages of the church membership believe it should be central to the denomination's ministry.

The research unit of the U.P.-USA's Support Agency surveyed 3,900 members, elders, pastors and specialized clergy on their attitudes toward peacemaking and disarmament.

At its 1980 General Assembly, the 2.5-million-member denomination voted to make peacemaking a special emphasis of the church for the next four years.

According to a report on the survey, one half of the laity (members and elders) and between two-thirds and three-fourths of the clergy said they believed peacemaking was central to the Gospel.

But a slightly smaller percentage said they believed peacemaking should be central to the ministries of the United Presbyterian Church.

Quadriplegic helps others

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Leroy Livingston spends much of his time in volunteer work. He is active in scouting and his church. He also likes to go camping. He is a quadriplegic.

Most of Livingston's satisfaction comes from his volunteer work, in which his wife, Mary Ann, also participates. At first the Livingstons held rap sessions with patients and their families at Good Samaritan Hospital where he was treated.

Later, along with 25 former patients and relatives, they spent time helping out at the hospital's rehabilitation center.

"Just seeing me in a wheelchair and finding out what all I can do — that helps them get over their feeling that they don't have any life," said Livingston, 43, who has been a quadriplegic since he broke his neck at his laborer's job 11 years ago.

His eyes light up when he speaks of one of his latest duties, teaching desert animal classes for third and fourth grade students at the Phoenix Zoo.

Mrs. Livingston also teaches at the zoo. Earlier this year the two were honored as the volunteers of the year.

The Livingstons' interest in the zoo is an outgrowth of their many years in scouting with their sons, Leroy Jr., 21, and Danny, 17. Livingston continues to work as a scouting leader.

The Livingstons are both active at Creighton United Methodist Church where Livingston is on the board of trustees and has served as head usher.

The couple takes camping trips and has visited such tourist spots as Disneyland and San Francisco.

Livingston was injured at a construction site in 1971 when a 16-foot log dropped off a skip loader, striking him on the head, smashing two vertebrae and badly bruising his spinal cord.

It took about a month before "I knew how bad it was and I would never get anything more back," he said. Livingston is paralyzed in all limbs. He has limited use of his arms but is still considered a quadriplegic.

A visit from the hospital's head physical therapist gave him his first bit of hope.

"I was really, really depressed and she sat there and talked to me," he said. "I really don't remember all she said, but she kind of pulled it together because her husband was a paraplegic so she knew what I was going through. She knew what to say to help me out."

Then, there was the occupational therapist who strapped a paint brush to Livingston's hand and said he was going to decoupage a plaque for Mrs. Living-ston's birthday. At the time, he was lying on his stomach with his arms hanging down.

"I told her, 'I can't move my arms' and she said, 'You try and you'll be able to do it.' She started my arms in a little bit of motion and after that I wouldn't give up," he said.
