Rise in debtors poses danger

United Press International
NEW YORK—The rapid rise in commercial and personal bankruptcies and debtor defaults during the recession has created a boom in the collection agency business.

That poses a public danger, says Stanley A. Tulchin, whose commercial credit collection firm has five offices across the country with 3,000 clients.

Tulchin says too many inexperienced and unqualified people are getting into debt collecting. Some of these firms use bumbling, harassing tactics and many are undercapitalized and have ineptly managed.

Some firms operate without trust funds or bonds, or mix the funds of different clients, he said.

Tulchin says he is a voice in the wilderness urging regulation of the collection business at a time when the general political and business climate in the United States is against more regulation and even favors deregulation.

He said the Commercial Law League, to which many collection agencies belong, tries to maintain a self-regulatory climate for the business but most of the new firms and some older firms don't belong to the league.

Tulchin's sole business is collecting delinquent commercial debts. He doesn't handle personal debt and doesn't initiate lawsuits.

He says that in business collection, the agency usually dealing with non-terminal cases so it has a responsibility to debtors as well as to its clients.

"You must know how to set a debt retirement program, the debtor to let him keep his business running while he's paying off. You must know how to win his confidence and obtain some priority on his available cash flow," Tulchin said.

That requires skill that the apt agency doesn't have.

An example of what can happen if a commercial debtor doesn't get skilled professional treatment from a collection agency or from his creditors, given by Abraham E. Getzler, New York management consultant who specializes in business turnarounds. Getzler said debtors who don't get professional help are liable to panic and suicidally foolish things like the threat of failure.

He cited a large apparel retailer who panicked and when pressed by its creditors and the most of its design department order to save $150,000 and its bills.
