Chaos averted by high court

United Press International
WASHINGTON — In a dramatic close to its first day back at work after the summer recess, the Supreme Court rescued the nation's bankruptcy courts from the brink of possible chaos.

After dealing with such matters as the Equal Rights Amendment and tuition tax credits, the justices postponed a ruling Monday that would have invalidated the powers of more than 220 bankruptcy judges Tuesday.

Granting a Justice Department request, the high court gave Congress until Dec. 24 to fix constitutional flaws in the revised bankruptcy court system.

In June the justices had ordered lawmakers to make the repairs by Monday, the opening of the court's 1982 term. But Congress left town last week for the election recess with the work undone, raising serious questions about how, or whether, bankruptcy judges would conduct their business.

The court, among its first orders of business, agreed to tackle the problem of whether parents may claim tuition tax credits for sending their children to private schools.

It also declared the 10-year-old Equal Rights Amendment legally dead and voted, 7-0, to disbar former Attorney General Richard Kleindienst who resigned during the Watergate scandal, from practicing before the Supreme Court.

The bankruptcy issue actually was a holdover from last term. The Supreme Court ruled a 1978 law designed to streamline the bankruptcy system in fact gave new judges too much power without insulating them from political and private pressures. Judicial protections are mandated by the Constitution.

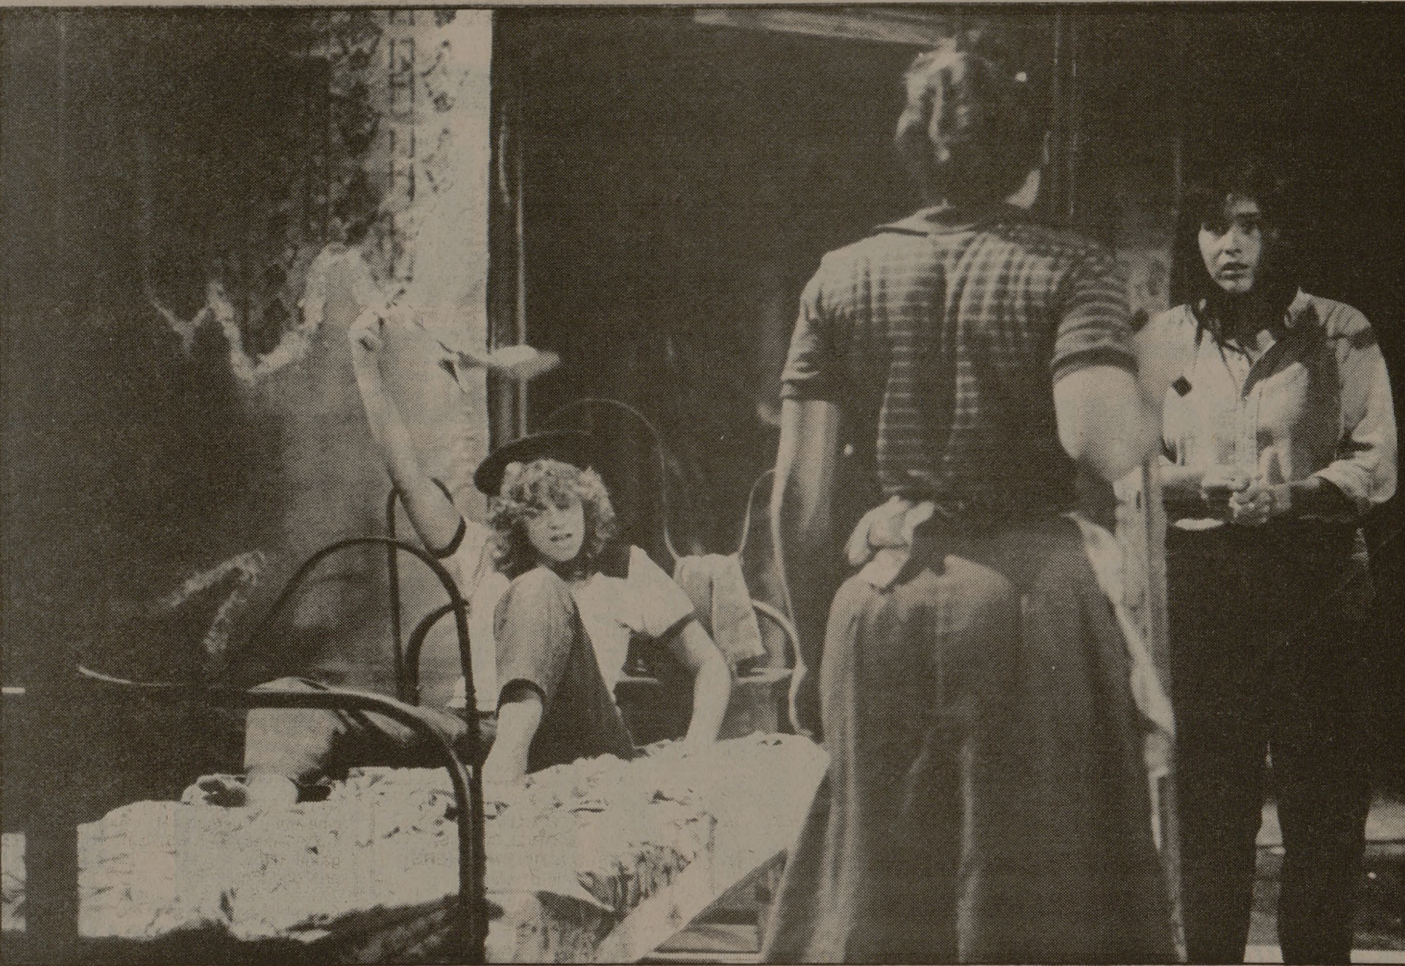

When it became apparent Congress would miss Monday's deadline for fixing constitutional flaws in the system, the Justice Department appealed for further postponement of the court ruling.

The high court's action will allow Congress to grapple with the issue in its post-election, lame-duck session scheduled to begin Nov. 29.

Bills already have been introduced, but a political split over how to handle the problem has developed and no legislation so far has passed either the House or Senate.

One bill that did clear the House Judiciary Committee last month would elevate bankruptcy judges to constitutional standards — lifelong appointments and salaries that cannot be cut by Congress.

But policy-makers in the judiciary itself oppose that approach, and instead have endorsed legislation that would go the opposite direction and strip bankruptcy courts of some of their powers.

Now you know

United Press International
LINCOLN, Neb. — Emotional abuse may cause more long-term damage to a child's mental health than physical abuse, says a family life specialist.

Most people think of child abuse in terms of severe physical punishment, such as a black eye, cut lip or broken bone, says Herbert G. Lingren of the University of Nebraska Extension Service.

Ridicule and intolerance, indifference, lack of appreciation and negative comparisons can be even more damaging to a child, Lingren says. So can ignoring the youngster or being inconsistent or severely restricting a child.

Parents should never say, "What a sloppy outfit," or "You dummy, you can do better than that," he adds.

Children need guidance and acceptance, he says. "Praising reasonable ideas and choices will help when you have to call a halt to some of their wilder schemes."

Draft registration rising

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The director of the Selective Service System said Tuesday Justice Department prosecutions of those who fail to register are having an effect.

Retired Maj. Gen. Thomas Turnage, interviewed on the CBS "Morning News" program, said some 8.7 million young men have complied with the law and registered with Selective Service. He said 500,000 young men have not, but of that number, 100,000 are men in the national reserves and unaware they are required to register.

Failure to register "has nothing to do with dissent," Turnage said. "A lot of it has to do with awareness."

A Justice Department official said over the weekend a total of 11 men have been indicted for failing to register, and two have been convicted. Failure to register is a felony, and carries a fine of up to $10,000 and five years in prison.

One of those convicted, Benjamin Sasway, received a 2 1/2-year sentence in San Diego Monday.

Asked if Sasway's sentence seemed fair, Turnage said, "It's not a matter of fairness, as far as I'm concerned. I'm sure judges in different parts of the country, viewing the issue from different perspectives, considering mitigating circumstances in the cases of individuals, will see the situation differently."

But Turnage added, "I note, however, that since the Justice Department has taken these actions our registration percentages have been on the increase and that's been over a period of the last three months."

Turnage repeated his denial that the government is attempting to prosecute only the most vocal, visible non-registrants.

"That's a misinformed position," Turnage said. "There will be no selective prosecution and there will be no specific area of the country where anyone is chosen or pointed out for particular action."

Selective Service spokeswoman Joan Lamb said Monday the service is sending out warning letters to those who have not registered.
