Reagan to visit Dallas

United Press International
SANTA BARBARA — President Reagan, facing a barrage of criticism for an upsurge in unemployment, intends to stress his "dramatic progress" in lowering interest rates and inflation in the waning weeks of the congressional campaign, aides indicate.

After spending a relaxed weekend at his mountaintop ranch, Reagan flies to Dallas today for two political appearances in support of Republican senatorial candidate Rep. James Collins, who has an uphill battle against incumbent Democrat Lloyd Bentsen.

Afterwards Reagan will head back to Washington, where he will spend the rest of the week, highlighted by a nationally broadcast "progress report" on the economy at 7:30 p.m. EDT Wednesday.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes has labeled the address "non-partisan," but speaker Thomas O'Neill already has made a protest to all three major networks for giving Reagan time for what he calls "a patently political address for an election."

NBC said it will air the address, but a spokesman for CBS said "no final decision" had been made although it was "likely" the network will carry the address. ABC said it was undecided.

The harshest criticism for Reagan Sunday came from AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland.

"Never before in history have two crack-brained theories like supply-side economics and cultist monetarism had a more extensive trial and been proved so wrong, to the great harm of so many people so quickly," said Kirkland during an appearance on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Chief of Staff James Baker said in a broadcast on ABC-TV Sunday that Reagan deplores the 10.1 percent unemployment "and we're going to do what we can to remedy that situation."

But, he added, "We're making dramatic progress on two fronts — inflation has been reduced by over 50 percent, and interest rates are down by some 40 percent."

Baker also insisted that the 11.3 million people out of work would not be a dramatic election issue or "a watershed event" as far as the balloting on Nov. 2 is concerned.

He said the administration does not believe it will be hurt badly because it had been anticipated for some time that the jobless rate would top 10 percent.

Furthermore, he said that "the 99 to 100 million Americans who are employed are considerably better off than they were two years ago by reason of increased purchase power."

"Their taxes are down and inflation is down, and they've got more real take-home pay," he added.

Reagan's political advisers and the GOP campaign committees were working out the final stages of the president's participation in the campaign.

So far, only one other date has been set for the president to travel. He will fly to Peoria, Ill., Oct. 20 for an appearance in support of Rep. Bob Michel, the House Republican leader, and the following morning will fly to Omaha, Neb.

Ancient statue found in crate

by United Press International
CHAUTAUQUA, N.Y. (UPI) — Allyson Shepard, an archaeology student working a summer job at the Chautauqua Institution, was more than a little surprised when she found a 3,200-year-old Egyptian statue.

Shepard, who works as a hostess at the famed cultural and learning institution located in New York's Southern Tier, didn't even have to go underground.

But the 20-year-old Fredonia native, a Bryn Mawr junior, recognized the statue as being an original rather than a plaster cast.

Experts said the statue, which she found packed in a crate, was from the Ramses II era of 1290-1224 B.C.

Officials at Chautauqua said the statue apparently was forgotten for more than 50 years after being packed away. It was collecting dust in a hospitality room.

"I was surprised to find it. You don't have Egyptian statues lying around Chautauqua," Shepard said. "It just got around to me and when I checked it out, I recognized it. It was real (black) granite and wasn't a plaster cast. I also recognized the hieroglyphics."

She said the statue represents "a man squatting with his arms around his knees, with the area enclosed by arms and legs as a solid block, which provides a large surface for the carving of hieroglyphic texts on the statue."

Shepard said the inscriptions on the statue indicate that its owner, Menepthah, was a royal courier, scribe, charioteer and high priest, who served King Ramses II.

Shepard said she discovered the 3 1/2-foot tall, 1,100-pound statue during the summer of 1979 and later had it documented by officials at the Brooklyn Museum.

They told her the sculpture was found by famed British archaeologist Sir Flinders Petrie during the mid-1880's in Egypt.

Excavating at Nebeseh, located in the marshy delta region of Egypt, Petrie discovered the statue in a badly damaged temple. It was the only sculpture found in the temple.

Jaruzelski expressed his sympathy to the rank and file members of Solidarity and the state-sponsored "branch" and "autonomous" unions also outlawed by Friday's Parliament session.

He stressed that new unions simultaneously created by the bill would be different from the old state-sponsored unions and Solidarity, which he called "an anti-socialist group."

Jaruzelski said the authorities had been guided by good intentions in their dealings with Solidarity.

"The space program should be ended," he says. "The whole thing is a hoax. It is simply a case of everything that goes up eventually comes down. It doesn't orbit. What we see on television are pre-arranged movies made in studios."

But why would the United States perpetuate such a "myth?"

"The space program keeps the myth alive that the world is round," he said. "You must have a total lie, not a partial lie. In order to keep the hoax alive, they staged the moon landing, and of course we all know that was a lie and that it never happened."

"Now they keep telling us the shuttle is orbiting the world, but it is just falling down. Again, what goes up, must come down."

en "In the first place, we are now enforcing the quiet hours. Our freshmen and sophomores are being provided that time to study. Our senior class is dedicated to that."

Burton has high hopes for the new faculty adviser program, in which 44 faculty members have volunteered to serve as advisers to Corps outfits. The commandant cited an especially gifted incoming class as another reason why he expects the Corps to improve academically.

"I think it's clear to our seniors and our juniors that these freshmen are a cut above the average bear," he said.
