(continued from page 9) since the Bears' offensive line may be the strongest part of the team. That unit is led by 6-5, 278-pound junior tackle Mark Adickes and 6-3, 274-pound center Randy Grimes.

The Baylor quarterback situation is still uncertain, with starter Mike Brannan still nursing an injury. Brannan or David Mangrum, who played the entire SMU game, will start against the Aggies.

Teaff said the Bears will have to concentrate on stopping the Aggie passing game, which has gained 1,183 yards in five games.

"Kubiak is a great quarterback," Teaff said. "I've said that since he's been at A&M. He does not surprise me with his ability. You've got to be ready for him or he's going to pass for 500 yards on you."

Teaff said that regardless of Texas A&M's record and the criticism of its defense, the Bears won't regard the Aggies as pushovers.

"A&M's played some obviously good teams," he said. "Boston College has shown week after week that it has a fine football team. Texas Tech has shown it can win in the conference, too."

"Anytime you step into a conference game, you stand a chance to lose the cotton-pickin' game. I felt like the Aggies played the University of Houston pretty darn well, although they gave up so many yards."

Teaff said the Bears, who defeated North Texas State, lost to Ohio State by a touchdown, beat Texas Tech by a point and tied Houston before losing to the Mustangs, have improved each week.

"I've been shocked, hurt, confused and abused with what we've done so far," he said. "I think that we are an improved football team. We are a little frustrated and hurt that we haven't won the games we should have won."

Brewers' Kuenn has respect of his team

United Press International MILWAUKEE — Go look through the record books sometime and see how many players you find with a lifetime average of better than .300. Not too many. Especially if they put in as many years in the big leagues as Harvey Kuenn.

For the 15 years he played with the Tigers, Indians, Giants, Cubs and Phillies before retiring after 1966 he was like one of those metronomes. That's how consistent a hitter he was. He wound up at .303 lifetime and during all the years he played, no one ever saw him choke up.

He did Sunday, though.

Not because the Milwaukee Brewers won their first American League pennant by beating the California Angels 4-3, completing a three-game playoff sweep after losing the first two under Kuenn's handling, but because of something one of his players said about him.

Ted Simmons, who caught all five games against the Angels, was the player who said it in response to a question about Kuenn, who was named the Brewers' interim manager June 2, taking over for Buck Rodgers with the team in fifth place, seven games out.

"Could you guys have won it without Harvey?" a TV interviewer wanted to know from Simmons.

The Brewers' catcher was slouching tiredly on a chair in front of his locker. He looked up at the man who had asked him the question with those big, sad-looking St. Bernard eyes of his.

"I wouldn't have wanted to," Simmons said.

Whether he knew it or not, the veteran receiver who now will face his old club, the St. Louis Cardinals, in the World Series, was talking for all the rest of the Milwaukee players. They're crazy about "Arch," which is what they call Kuenn, and he tells you straight out he feels the same way about them.

When someone told the Brewers' manager what Simmons had to say about him and asked him for his reaction, he couldn't provide it immediately. Each time he started to say something, he stopped.

"It chokes me up," he said finally, and it was difficult to tell whether the moisture on his cheeks came from his eyes or from the champagne most of the players were spraying on each other in the clubhouse.

Some of that champagne was left over from last year when the Brewers made the mini-playoffs but lost the division title to the Yankees. This is the farthest the Brewers have come and Sunday's uphill victory over the Angels was achieved 25 years to the day Milwaukee won its only championship. The team was known as the Braves then and was in the National League. Milwaukee beat the Yankees in the 1957 World Series after being down 3-1.

Despite the Brewers' triumph over the Angels, whom they beat in the final showdown contest of the playoffs the same way they did the Baltimore Orioles for the division title on the last day of the season after losing three in a row to them, Kuenn remains an interim manager.

"It doesn't bother me," he says. "Everybody's really an interim manager."

Kuenn is right, but in his case there's a difference.

Bud Selig, the Brewers' owner, and Harry Dalton, their general manager, feel the same way about Kuenn as they did about George Bamberger, one of the Brewers' former managers now piloting the Mets. They love Arch — and they worry about him.

They worry about his health just as they did about Bamberger's as they did about Bamberger's as they did about Bamberger's as they did about Bamberger's.

Kuenn's right leg was amputated below the knee in the spring of 1980 following blood clot complications.

About a month ago, Dalton talked to Kuenn regarding next year. Nothing was decided. Kuenn feels about next year as he feels about everything else. What will be, will be. If he wants to keep managing, which it seems he does, the Brewers will let him.
