Texas candidates quibble

United Press International
Texas attorney general candidates Jim Mattox and Bill Meier swapped verbal punches Monday over campaign contributions while Sen. Lloyd Bensten, D-Texas, accused opponent, Senate candidate Rep. James M. Collins, R-Texas, of wavering on the Social Security issue.

Mattox, Democratic nominee, told an Austin news conference his GOP opponent, Meier, "is so afraid of telling the voters the truth about his campaign contributions that he's trying to launder money through another committee."

The committee, "Texans for a Competent Attorney General," is run by state Rep. Bob Davis, R-Irving, who was on Meier's campaign payroll until the new committee was formed.

Mattox said, "What my opponent is doing is using this committee to hide the sources of his money," he said. "He doesn't want the public to realize the full forces of the big special interests behind him."

Mattox said 43 percent of Meier's contributions came from political action committees.

Meier fired back that Mattox criticized his campaign donations "in order to throw up a smokescreen about his own (contribution) reports."

The Republican said he was not "working directly" with the Davis committee.

"Bob Davis left my campaign as finance director quite some time ago and then later formed his own group after he had received numerous requests from business and political leaders to form such a group for me."

Meanwhile, in a statement released by his Austin office, Bensten said Collins should explain whether he agrees with the National Alliance of Senior Citizens that the minimum Social Security benefit should be eliminated.

Collins has boasted, Bensten, that he is backed by a right-winged organization which has a poor record on issue of Social Security.

Collins replied that Bensten campaign is in "pretty bad shape."

The Collins campaign conducted an independent survey taken at a Houston radio station, showed Bensten trailing in his own hometown.

County commissioner races marred by suit

United Press International
DENTON — The outcome of two county commissioner races may be in doubt even after the Nov. 2 election because of a lawsuit filed by six black Denton County residents.

Federal Judge William Wayne Justice said Monday he would not certify results of the two elections unless the U.S. Justice Department approves the new voting boundaries before the election.

The lawsuit filed last week alleges minority voter strength is weakened by placing predominantly black neighborhoods in Denton and Lewisville in different precincts.

The county approved the lines last December but did not seek Justice Department approval of them until Sept. 22.

Denton County is covered by the 1965 Voting Rights Act so Justice Department approval of any changes is required.

In one race, Republican Sandy Jacobs of Carrollton Democrat Charles Moran Hebron face each other in precinct 2. In the other race, Democrat Bill Switzer of Sanger is opposed for Precinct 4, but nomination under the same district lines being challenged, his election also is clouded.

Even if the Justice Department approves the new Justice will hear the federal tentatively set for November.
