Dip, chew boost youth oral cancer

United Press International
 ATLANTA — A campus rage of dipping snuff and chewing tobacco has caused an alarming increase in the incidence of oral cancers and pre-cancerous lesions in young people, oral surgeons said.
 "Smokeless" has become a campus rage, said Drs. Irving Meyer and Kent Cohenour, members of the American Association of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgeons.
 "I have been shocked to see kids all the way down to age 7 dipping snuff or chewing," said Cohenour.
 Meyer and Cohenour said they have noted increases in the incidence of oral malignancies in their practices.
 Chewing tobacco and dipping snuff can lead to leukoplakia, a pre-cancerous condition of the mouth, said. Each year, oral cancer diagnosed in 27,000 people causing 9,000 deaths.
 Leukoplakia is a white, persistent plaque that may range from smooth, shiny area to a thick, wrinkled, hardened lesion, Meyer said.
 The condition often appears where the tobacco rests in the mouth but it also can be present on the tongue, lips, salivary glands, palate, cheeks, and between the mouth and nose.
 The surgeons said abstaining from chewing and dipping was the best measure for preventing oral cancer.
