Father asks group to find liver donor

United Press International
NEW YORK — The father of an 11-month-old girl who will die before Christmas unless she receives a liver transplant pleaded with a national medical organization today for help in finding a donor.

Charles Fiske of Bridgewater, Mass., said so far all attempts to find a donor for his blonde daughter Jamie have been fruitless.

"We are racing against time," he said. Fiske said doctors told him his daughter would live only a month or two without the $100,000 operation.

"I am asking you to keep your eyes and ears open for a liver for my Jamie," Fiske said in an emotional plea to about 1,000 members of the American Pediatrics Association meeting at the New York Hilton.

"We have knocked on every door and now we are appealing to you. Jamie is fighting for her life. She wants to survive," Fiske said.

Officials said Fiske's five-minute speech was the first ever made by a layman to organization members.

Dr. Harvey Jennison, the association's executive director, declined to predict the chances a liver would be found for the child, but said: "We will all respond in whatever way we can."

Fiske was notified Wednesday that the association would hear his plea. "We petitioned that body to see if I could get up and make my plea for them to identify a suitable donor for Jamie," said Fiske, a Boston University School of Medicine administrator. "They were initially unwilling to do that because a non-medical person has never addressed the group before."

Jamie, who was born on Thanksgiving Day 1981, is suffering from biliary atresia, a breakdown of the bile ducts in the liver preventing the normal cleansing of the liver and subsequently poisoning the body. Doctors say she probably will die in a month if she does not get the transplant.

The disease occurs once in every 10,000 births and is usually fatal by the end of the first year. Doctors are looking for a one-year-old brain-dead child with type O blood as a donor.

Jaime's ailment was discovered after her parents noticed she was jaundiced at the age of six weeks. She was referred by a local doctor to Children's Hospital Medical in Boston where surgeons diagnosed her condition and performed an eight-hour operation in February.

The surgery, called a "kasai" procedure, involves taking a piece of the small intestine and constructing a new place of the faulty one. "Things went well at the end of May, and then started looking again," Fiske said.

She was readmitted to Children's Hospital where she underwent a second operation July 15 to correct drainage of the liver.

But Dr. Arnold Colclough, Fiske and his wife, Marie, operation was only a temporary solution and said Jamie needs a liver transplant.

"We were hoping for hope that that would be something that we would have with," Fiske said.

Jamie was transferred to Minnesota State University Hospital in Minneapolis on Sept. 15. She remains with her mother waiting for word on a donor.

"We are faced with it against time," Fiske said. Doctors say she needs the transplant immediately.

The Fiskes have had offers for a kidney, one for a five-month-old infant and another from a 15-month-old child, both brain dead. But doctors said they need the child very close to Jamie's age.

To date, 18 liver transplants have been done at the Minnesota facility.

Library is a sailor's salvation

United Press International
SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. — Wives and girlfriends comfort seamen on leave, but librarian Nancy Sillers is one woman who can help a merchant marine bide his time while crossing the inland waters.

During the long hours spent rocking on cargo ships, many seamen pass the time with a novel or magazine from the American Merchant Marine Library — an institution managed by Sillers for the past 17 years.

Each American ship sailing through the Soo locks on the St. Mary's River, which joins Lake Superior and Lake Huron, stops for a visit from Sillers.

The vessels usually get two cartons of books, each containing 20 fiction novels, five non-fiction books and a supply of magazines and periodicals.

"We've never lost a book," boasts Sillers. "We had one book that was misplaced, but at the end of the shipping season it was found. The seaman had paid for it, but he got his money back."

The library, founded in 1915, is a compilation of donated books and magazines. It fostered the development of an entire American Merchant Marine Library system that now serves seamen in New York, Boston, San Francisco, New Orleans and Seattle.

Sillers helped her mother run the library for 30 years before taking it over herself. When asked about changes, "Not many," she says, "we just have to provide more books for the women on the ships. There are a lot more women on board today, doing everything. They used to just work in the galley."

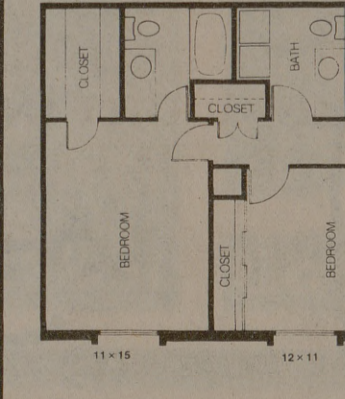

The library was founded by Belle Case to provide some sort of entertainment for World War I sailors traveling through the locks enroute to Europe.
