

Justice Department refuses documents

United Press International
LOS ANGELES — The Justice Department has defied a judge's order to surrender White House documents to attorneys of a man accused of not registering for the draft.

The department also said presidential counsel Edwin Meese will not testify, increasing chances the case will be dismissed.

The Justice Department announced its plans in papers filed Friday, and U.S. District Court Terry Hatter Jr. must decide if he will give in to the administration or drop charges against Wayne. A hearing is scheduled for Thursday.

Attorneys for David Wayne, 21, a former Yale philosophy student from suburban Pasadena, contend the documents and Meese's testimony will prove the Reagan administration has an illegal policy of selectively prosecuting only outspoken draft resisters. Prosecutors maintain the documents and Meese's testimony are covered by the president's right of executive privilege.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Romero said he understood it was normal practice in cases where the government has declined to comply with a discovery order for the judge to dismiss charges. If that happens, he said, the government will promptly pursue an appeal to the 9th Circuit Court.

A spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, which is defending Wayne, said the administration decided to risk dismissal of the charges to keep secret "just how arbitrary and capricious the decisions were made to prosecute."

In his written refusal, Romero said prosecutors defied the judge because "important governmental interests are at stake in connection with our claim of privilege."

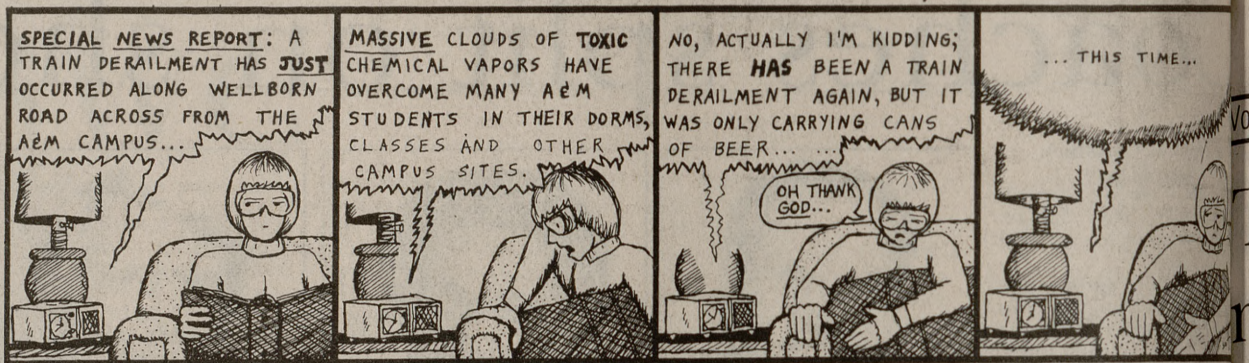

The response also said there was not sufficient reason "to justify requiring the appearance and testimony of an official as senior as the counselor to the president."

Hatter ruled last week Wayne's attorneys had a right to see White House and Selective Service documents the government gave the court, and also said Meese must testify if called by the defense.

The judge gave the government a week to decide if it would appeal the ruling, and extended the deadline for a day Thursday after Romero asked for extra time.

Officials seek man in Tylenol deaths

United Press International
CHICAGO — Kevin J. Masterson, sought for questioning in the cyanide poisonings of seven people, kept to himself while living in Florida, acquaintances say, and blamed a grocery chain for wrecking his marriage.

Authorities began looking for Masterson Nov. 1 but have not been able to locate him. Masterson's father said he is on a vacation.

Masterson is not charged with a crime nor is he labeled a suspect in the deaths of seven Chicago-area people between Sept. 29 and Oct. 1. The victims swallowed deadly cyanide-dosed capsules of Extra-Strength Tylenol.

Records show Masterson, 35, lived in a house near Orlando, Fla., for about one year before he sold it during the summer of 1981.

The real-estate agent who helped Masterson locate the house said Masterson often complained about an $8,000 settlement his estranged wife, Joann, received from Jewel Food Stores.

Masterson said he blamed the dispute for "destroying her and their relationship," the agent said.

"He seemed to keep by himself," a former neighbor said, "He lived alone but he had friends, young men friends who came by every so often."

The grudge against Jewel apparently arose after Master-son's former wife filed suit against the chain, claiming she was mistreated by security guards. A settlement was reached, but he was dissatisfied and vowed revenge, the newspaper said.

Other friends told investigators Masterson had said, "Now is the time to even the score," but he never specified what he planned to do.

When authorities asked for a search warrant for Masterson's residence in suburban Lombard, they referred to the alleged grudge. The Chicago Tribune reported the affidavit quoted Masterson as telling a psychiatrist, "Many people will suffer because of what was done to my wife by Jewel."
