Science bypasses paralysis

United Press International
DAYTON, Ohio — A young woman who is paralyzed from the waist down had a 50-50 chance Thursday of becoming the first paralysis victim to walk by means of computerized electrical stimulation.

Nan Davis, 22, has been confined to a wheelchair since a car accident the night of her high-school graduation. But in recent months, her legs have been exercised and strengthened by computerized electrical stimulation in a Wright State University laboratory.

Wright State scientists scheduled a demonstration and news conference to showcase their technology, which previously has made it possible for paralyzed patients to pedal bicycles and tricycles.

Wright State officials believe in the near future the technology will enable her and other paralyzed people to walk.

For the past 13 years, Dr. Jerrold Petrofsky, director of Wright State's biomedical engineering lab, has been refining technology in which he links electric current with computers to produce movement in otherwise lifeless muscles of paralysis patients.

He tapes electrodes to the skin over six major muscle groups in the legs and programs a computer to order successive, milli-second bursts of electrical stimulation to the appropriate muscles at the appropriate times. Instantaneous feedback to the computer regulates the movements.

Petrofsky said in patients who have been able to pedal bicycles and tricycles the movements are as smooth as those of a normal person.

Petrofsky's ultimate goal is to allow paralyzed people to walk freely with microprocessors (tiny computers on chips) implanted near their paralyzed muscles.

Student takes 9 hostage

United Press International
BURKE, Va. — A jilted teenager armed with a rifle released a sixth hostage early Thursday but still held three others in an office of Virginia's largest high school.

Police said James Stevens, 18, was despondent because his girlfriend rejected him. Stevens released one woman but held Lake Braddock High School Principal John Alwood, and another man and woman.

Stevens, who fired several shots at his girlfriend and police, forcing evacuation of the school, took nine hostages at the outset of the drama Wednesday afternoon. He later traded five hostages for food.

The sixth hostage to be freed was Frances Ramsey, an employee in the data processing department.

The school, the largest in the state with 4,300 students, was ordered closed today because of the standoff. Telephone service was cut off because Stevens had been trying to make calls to Texas and elsewhere, officers said.

Police, who said Stevens was armed with a .22-caliber rifle with a telescopic site, indicated they were willing to wait out the situation.

"This guy is under tremendous strain and has put himself in a difficult position. We have made significant progress since yesterday and we are not about to over-react to a situation like this," said Buracker.

Fairfax County Police Capt. Andrew Page said Stevens had made no demands.

Teachers said Stevens was able to get in almost unnoticed with the rifle because they thought he was carrying a prop for a production of the musical "Oklahoma."

Police said on Wednesday Stevens asked for coffee, ice cream, sodas and a pizza.
