Crowds behind the scenes

About 80 students are working part time in Rudder Tower this week after the pre-registration lines close. The students process card packets before sending them to the computers.

reports, some of which have been complimentary, to very detailed reports, which have cited specific violations," he said.

He said he is following up those reports by talking to some of the people involved — clerks, voters and, in a few cases, the election judges.

"What I've been trying to do is assess, to some degree, the validity of the complaints," Stadelmann said. "Some of the complaints are quite valid — others, I don't know. And others, I've decided probably were more misunderstandings than any serious problem. Of course, even if one person can't vote, it's serious — particularly to that person. But it may not involve any great legal issue."

Stadelmann said discrimination was most obvious in Precinct 10 in southeast College Station, where he said students were being turned away illegally.

Students whose registrations were fouled up, who weren't on the election roster or who hadn't received their voter registration cards, were turned away and not allowed to vote, Stadelmann said.

Stadelmann said the procedure to follow in that case is to allow the person to sign an affidavit swearing that he had registered to vote, but he said the election judge for precinct 10, Audrey Bunting, would not allow students to do that.

Stadelmann said that is contrary to federal election laws and is discriminatory.

Bunting said she turned away students who were not registered correctly, but said that is what state law requires.

"I'm not sure that not using the affidavit in question is contrary to state law," Bunting said. "The people that are allowed to vote are those who are registered to vote."

"There are specific laws that pertain to who votes. I don't believe he (Stadelmann) understands the issue."

The executive committee of the Brazos County Republican Party will be meeting next week to discuss what should be done about the charges of discrimination.

Stadelmann said they would at least file a complaint with the Texas secretary of state and might file a suit against election officials. Other options include asking the state Republican Party to file a suit or asking a county attorney to do so.

They also will consider asking such an organization as the American Civil Liberties Union to file a class action suit on behalf of the students, he said.
