Former spy convicted

United Press International
ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Edwin Paul Wilson, who used his extensive contacts developed as a former CIA agent to build a lucrative export business out of intelligence and arms dealings, was found guilty Wednesday on seven of eight counts of smuggling arms to Libyan officials.

A jury of seven women and five men deliberated for four and a half hours before returning the verdict for Wilson, 54.

The combined convictions carry prison sentences totaling 39 years and fines totaling $240,000. However, it would be highly unusual if the full penalties were levied.

U.S. District Judge Richard Williams set sentencing for Dec. 17.

Wilson, who worked for the CIA from 1955 to 1971, was convicted of conspiracy to transport four handguns and an M-16 automatic rifle across international borders; exporting the weapons without a license; and shipping them aboard commercial airliners — without proper notice — to the regime of Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy.

He was found innocent by the jury of transporting firearms across state lines without registration.

The 6-foot-4, graying ex-spy still faces other charges stemming from his Libyan operation in two trials in Washington and one in Houston, and a grand jury in Denver is investigating a possible link between Wilson and the shooting and wounding of a Libyan dissident in Colorado.

The conviction in Virginia is expected to increase pressure on the defense to work out a deal in those cases with the Justice Department, which is investigating extensive overseas arms and terrorist activities.

The judge gave the case to the jury Tuesday evening after the second day of testimony.

Twice Wednesday morning, the panel came out to ask questions about the indictments, including whether the weapons Wilson was accused of exporting were on a State Department list of items needing licenses. Williams informed the jury the weapons were on the list.

Astronauts return to work, report on shuttle's flight

United Press International
SPACE CENTER, Houston — The Columbia 5 astronauts, back from a mission that added momentum to America's space freight program, got back to work almost as soon as they returned home.

The astronauts arrived in Houston Tuesday afternoon to a big welcome from space center workers, friends and well-wishers.

Wednesday's schedule called for Cmdr. Vance Brand, copilot Robert Overmyer and mission satellite-launchers Joseph Allen and William Lenoir to begin a long series of reports on the first commercial flight of the shuttle.

Overmyer went directly to a laboratory Tuesday night to test the theory that just-returned astronauts are immune to earthly motion sickness.

Blindfolded, he was strapped to a chair and whirled around 20 times a minute while moving his head — and sure enough, it didn't bother him.

"This is the first time we've proved the theory," Overmyer said. "Whether it means anything, I don't know."

Wednesday, engineers were given knowledge gained during the five-day orbital cargo mission to use in unraveling problems with two $2 million space suits used on the trip.
