

TCU females to release calendar of campus men

United Press International
FORT WORTH — Two female art students at Texas Christian University are headed for the big time in art photography, releasing this week a calendar of 12 male students attending the mostly-female school.

The all-male calendar is the innovation of junior art student Sharon Jones and art graduate student Micki Muhlbauer. Since the concept was disclosed in the student newspaper, the project has drawn a lot of attention — not all of it welcomed by the women.

"Most of the reaction has been either one way or the other," said Jones. "People say they either really like the idea or they don't like it at all."

She said the school administration already said it wanted to see the calendar before it was sold on campus.

"We told them there was nothing in it to embarrass the school. But they want to see it before they'll allow us to sell it," Jones said.

The women hope the calendar, which will be priced at $6.95, will go on sale later this week.

Women students were called upon to nominate the "best hunks" on the 6,000 student campus, where women outnumber men three to one. The 12 finalists were chosen by five Fort Worth businesswomen who had no idea who the men were — thus eliminating campus popularity as a factor in the final decision and basing the choice on looks alone.

Nevertheless, a couple of the finalists were football players — including all-American wide receiver Stanley Washington.

Jones, 23, said there is no nudity in the calendar — just a lot of open shirts and suggestive poses.

"Provocative is a good word for it," she said. "A few of them don't have shirts on, and some of their shirts are open. One is wearing a tux."

Jones said she and Muhlbauer, 31, had no problem getting the men to pose.

"A couple weren't sure at first but we told them they didn't have to take their clothes off," she said. "Most of them were pretty agreeable."

"We even had a couple of men come and ask how they could be in it."

Wood's murder skipped

Harrelson tells life story

United Press International
SAN ANTONIO — Accused hitman Charles Harrelson Monday recounted his life story for a federal jury but entirely skipped 1979, the year U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was killed.

Instead, the accused killer of the judge dwelt on his two arrests in 1980, claiming he was framed on one and threatened with death by federal agents on the other.

Harrelson was arrested Sept. 1, 1980, east of Van Horn when he tried to shoot the muller of his car in a cocaine stupor. When he was arrested on a weapons charge earlier that year in Houston, Harrelson said a gun was planted in his car.

Harrelson, 44, is accused of killing Wood for a $250,000 payoff from Jimmy Chagra, a Las Vegas gambler who was to be tried in Wood's court for drug smuggling.

Witnesses have said Chagra was convinced he could not get a fair trial from Wood and probably would be sentenced to life in prison without parole — the maximum sentence from a judge nicknamed "Maximum John."

Also on trial are Chagra's wife Elizabeth, accused of agreeing to the slaying and delivering the payoff money to Harrelson's stepdaughter, and Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann. Mrs. Harrelson, who already has been convicted of using a false name to buy the Weatherby Mark V rifle believed to have killed Wood, is charged with obstruction of justice.

"I remember thinking some incendiary device had been fixed under the car (in the Van Horn arrest)," he said. "I thought I was going to be killed. I was somewhat messed up (on cocaine). In my demented condition, I tried to shoot the muller off."

The bullet ricocheted and flattened a tire, leaving Harrelson stranded in the desert. Harrelson said the FBI or federal drug agents were only a few hundred yards away watching him.

Harrelson said he thought they were following him and were trying to kill him. He said he held a gun under his chin and demanded that someone he knew be present to see him arrested.

The arresting officials summoned Virginia Farrah of El Paso, who had employed Harrelson as a bodyguard during the summer of 1980.

"I wanted to have someone there who knew me and could attest that I was in one piece when I was arrested," Harrelson said.

Harrelson had been arrested in February 1980 on a weapons charge in Houston. He said he was convinced at the time that someone had planted the gun in his car, but that he did not know until rancher Hampton Robinson testified at his trial that he had turned Harrelson in to police.

Harrelson said he also suspected his boyhood friend Greg Goodrum in the alleged frameup and forced a confession from Goodrum at the point of a gun.

Harrelson was expected to be on the stand for several days. He has not yet mentioned the death of Wood, who was shot to death in the parking lot of his apartment complex on May 29, 1979.

The only thing he said about 1979 was that he married Jo Ann Harrelson on Jan. 7 and went with her to Mexico City in February.

Harrelson has maintained he was asleep at his Dallas apartment when Wood was killed 275 miles away in San Antonio. Three defense witnesses have already testified they saw Harrelson in Dallas later that morning.

During the first five weeks of the trial, 83 witnesses testified for the prosecution.

One of the witnesses, El Paso lawyer Joe Chagra, said Harrelson not only confessed to him that he had killed Wood but also said he had killed President John F. Kennedy in Dallas 19 years ago.

The 100-seat courtroom in the federal courthouse named for Wood was packed most of last week by spectators awaiting Harrelson's testimony. When Harrelson finally took the stand, he only had time to give a brief autobiography before court recessed for the weekend.

Harrelson's testimony Friday stopped with his conviction in 1973 in the slaying of a Hearne grain dealer. He was accused of killing Sam Degelia Jr. for $2,000 and served 10 years in prison.

Texas briefs

United Press International
DALLAS — An 85-acre city landfill, used as a dump for industrial wastes more than a decade ago and since closed, may have contaminated ground water and the underlying aquifer.

A consulting firm was hired and recently drilled five monitoring wells in and around the landfill, which was closed in 1975, to determine whether ground water has been polluted.

The 85-acre site, along the Trinity River, opened in 1957 and was used to dispose solid waste. In 1967, however, the city allowed the disposal of more than 130 million gallons of industrial wastes such as cyanide, chromium, acids, paints, solvents, oils, inks, sludges, grease and insecticides.

PORT NECHES — BF Goodrich has closed its synthetic rubber plant for one week, officials said.

A company spokesman said Sunday the sluggish economy has reduced the demand for synthetic rubber made at the plant. About 400 members of six unions have been on strike at the plant since April, but a team of supervisors have been running the facility.

The plant will reopen Saturday. Last June the plant closed for nine days and in September, it was closed for a week.

HOUSTON — The season of sneezing, coughing and fevers has made its annual return, and doctors at Baylor College of Medicine are advising those people seeking relief with over-the-counter remedies to first read the labels.

"Many concoctions that contain three or more drugs will probably have something unnecessary in them," said Dr. Robert Couch, director of Baylor Influenza Center. "And the more drugs you take, the more likely you are to have reactions to one of them."

Couch said ingredients are listed on the packages of over-the-counter medications, and many combinations of ingredients treat a number of symptoms. However, he urged, remember more is not better.

Bank gets bomb threat

MOUNT PLEASANT — A bomb threat made by a telephone caller today forced the evacuation of employees at the Interfirst Bank and the facility was closed for two hours, police said.

No one was injured in the incident. Authorities refused to say whether the money demanded by the caller was paid.

"There indeed was a bomb threat and an extortion attempt was made. Nothing has developed so far. It is still under investigation," a police statement said.

Bank president Charles Black said, "The bank was closed for two hours and it is open for business now. I can't answer any other question."
