Anti-Klan protest follows rally

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Anti-Ku Klux Klan demonstrators rained rocks and bottles on police and overturned a police car near the White House Saturday following a brief Klan rally. Police used tear gas to disperse the crowd.

The violence, reminiscent of anti-Vietnam War protests of the 1960s, broke out following the evacuation of some 50 Klan members from Lafayette Square, across the street from the White House.

Two police officers were taken to a hospital.

The Knights of the Ku Klux Klan cancelled plans for a march from the Capitol to the square and did not don white robes for the 15-minute rally held to protest federal immigration policy. Police escorted Klan members from the Capitol to the square and out of the city.

It was the racist organization's first rally in Washington in 57 years.

About 1 p.m. EST, violence broke out several blocks from the square, where about 500 anti-Klan demonstrators gathered.

Bottles, rocks, concrete and pieces of police barricades were thrown at police officers as the demonstrators, some wearing Arab headgear, chanted, "Death to the Klan. Death to the Klan." A man in a wheelchair headed one line of demonstrators.

Police wearing gas masks fired canisters of tear gas. The crowd responded by throwing more objects, but dispersed.

Later, some 500 demonstrators regrouped at the square, where rocks, sticks and bottles were thrown at nearby buildings and an unmarked police car was overturned.

President and Mrs. Reagan

were not at the White House, but at their California ranch.

Police reported at least one arrest, of an anti-Klan demonstrator for crossing a police line.

The Rev. J. Walton Senterfitt, a leader of the Labor-Black Mobilization against the Klan, charged the police with trying to intimidate his group with making a "militant, orderly" protest.

The anti-Klan demonstrators represented a variety of groups, including the pro-Palestinian November 29th Coalition. Several demonstrators carried Palestinian flags.

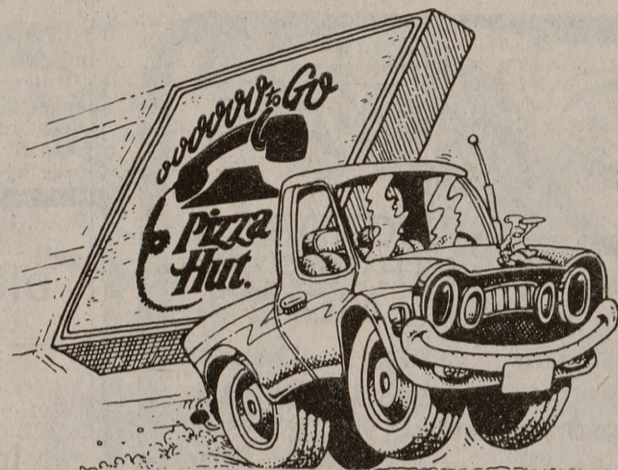

The national chaplain of the KKK, Thom Robb of Arkansas, led the rally because Don Black, the grand wizard of the Klan, said a U.S. magistrate told him he would be arrested if he leaves New Orleans.

Said Robb, "The purpose of this march is to demonstrate to the American people that there are yet those who want to stand up for the defense of our nation, our homeland, our families and faith, to defend those things from all odds, from all people who would seek to destroy the foundation on which America was founded upon."
