Children bad toys don't mix

United Press International

WASHINGTON - The Consumer Product Safety Commission is launching a nationwide toy safety campaign during the holiday season to make parents aware of the reasons tens of thousands of children are injured by playthings.

The commission urged parents Wednesday to be especially careful during the holiday period in picking the right toys, sleds and bicycles for children.

The federal agency said every year between 125,000 and 130,000 children suffer injuries requiring hospital emergency room treatment from accidents involving toys.

The safety campaign announced at Capital Children's Museum, is sponsored by the commission and the Toy Manufacturers of America, the industry's trade association.

Based on hospital emergency reports monitored by the agency, last year, more than 38[illegible] children under 15 were injured while riding bicycles. Another 29,000 children were injured through the use of sleds, 97[illegible] were hurt in accidents involving skates and 24,000 injuries involved skateboards.

The commission has set mandatory safety standards for electric toys, bicycles, pacifiers, infant rattles, toys with sharp points and edges, lead paint and small parts in toys.

But there are 150,000 different toys on the market and the commission cannot test them all, the agency said.

"It is the manufacturer's responsibility to assure that its products meet the requirements the commission said, noting many toy makers have extensive testing programs.

"Select toys to suit the size, abilities and interests of the individual child," the commission advised parents.

The commission urged parents:

- look for safety labels such as "Not recommended for children under 3" or "Flame retardant-Flame resistant."
- make sure all instructions are clear.
- discard plastic wrappings from toys before they can hurt or choke children.
- check toys periodically for breakage and potential hazards.
- explain to children how to use their toys.
- keep toys designed for older children out of the hands of younger ones.

"Many toy-related injuries occur as a result of sudden impact with a toy, such as a fall on a toy, or from a thrown toy," the commission said. "Young children are especially vulnerable to choking and suffocation hazards - trying to swallow small pieces of toys, or household items, or becoming entangled in strings, cords or clothing."
