A&M picks senior for Rhodes contest

by Brian Boyer

Battalion Reporter
ChrisE Cleveland, a senior political science major from Houston, was chosen out of nine candidates to represent Texas A&M in the Rhodes Scholar competition.

On Wednesday, Cleveland and about a dozen other nominees from Texas universities are scheduled to appear before the state selection committee in Houston. The committee selects two candidates to advance to the district competition, where candidates from Texas and five neighboring states appear before the district selection committee, which chooses four Rhodes Scholars.

If Cleveland wins the state and district competition, she will be designated as a scholar-elect pending her acceptance by an Oxford college. She would like to participate in an Oxford program in politics, philosophy and economics, and eventually go to law school.

Thirty-two Rhodes Scholars are chosen from the United States each year. The scholarship pays all tuition and fees at Oxford, in addition to transportation costs and a yearly "maintenance allowance of 2,400 English pounds.

Selections are made on the basis of interviews with each candidate, judged on scholastic achievements, leadership and character.

"The interviews are intensive," Cleveland says. "I have three men that are extremely intelligent about everything in the world. 'What was the percentage of minorities in your high school?' 'How do you solve the economic problems of the United States?'"

Cleveland, who plans to graduate in May, is currently executive vice president of the Government and International Studies Association, a member of the President's Committee for a Vice President and a member of the Student Organizations Board and the Committee for University Discipline Appeals.

KAMU-TV planning to extend money-raiser

by David Tharp

Battalion Reporter
In an effort to reach its contribution goal of $18,000, KAMU-TV, the Texas A&M University-operated television station, plans to extend its fall festival through Saturday, said Penny Zent, development director for KAMU, Thursday.

This year the festival has been extended from the usual nine-day program to 15 days, she said.

Through Wednesday, the campaign had raised $11,800, $6,200 short of their projected goal.

The festival, which started on Nov. 27, was scheduled to end Wednesday night.

"We've had a couple of slow days," Zent said. "Hopefully we can get to the $15,000 mark before Saturday night. If not, we will just have to do something else to make up for the additional money that we didn't get or make some program cuts."

All the money raised in the campaign is used to buy programming through the Public Broadcasting System.

The festival is held each year in August, March and December. The projected grand total for this year's program is $50,000.

Last year was difficult, Zent said. The total amount raised last year was $5,500 and $10,000 was raised the year before that, she said.

In addition to the festival, KAMU will try to raise $55,000 from local businesses, which would have an opportunity to buy or underwrite a program return for on-air credit, she said.

Another fundraising effort planned by the station is a Christmas tasting party featuring a variety of foods from Texas, California and Europe. The party is scheduled for Jan. 20 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the Aggie Inn. Admission is $10 per person. Tickets are available at the station.

KAMU is also raising money with its annual spring fund-raising show featuring items donated by bidding over the telephone. All the items are contributed by local merchants in return for air credit.

President Ronald Reagan's budget cuts have caused the station to turn to the public for help, she said.

"We lost $76,000 this year because of Reagan's budget cuts. They decreased the station's budget from $172 million to $165 million nationwide."

KAMU also lost more than $80,000 in state funding as a result of former Texas A&M President Jarvis Miller's budget cuts. An extension of the state will mean schedule changes for Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights.

The ultimate gift ranch to sell rhinos

United Press International
CLIFTON — Texas Safari Ranch would like to put a rhinoceros under your Christmas tree this year.

Mike Cloer, public relations director for the drive-through exotic animal park north of Waco in central Texas, placed an advertisement to that end in a Dallas newspaper.

"Texas-sized Christmas gift," the ad reads. "One year old, 1,500 pound female rhinoceros. Weaned and ready to be given to the Texas rancher who has everything. $20 per pound on the hoof plus $10 per mile one way delivery."

"Contact Texas Safari Ranch in Clifton, Texas at 817-776-4789, 817-772-6753, or 817-675-3658.

"Conditioned sale. Optics more reasonably priced available."

Cloer said the conditions placed on the sale would require a careful examination of the son's ability to take care of the rhinoceros.

"We are not interested in someone who just wants to throw money away," he said. "We would check out whoever the buyer was."

The public relations man said the advertisement was placed in the magazine, and numerous animals are sold by the ranch each year, though not necessarily at Christmas.

The ranch has announced a price for the rhinoceros of $100,000 to $30,000 for the rhino.
