Department of Agriculture bans Mexican fruit

United Press International
Beginning Wednesday, the U.S. Department of Agriculture temporarily will halt the import of Mexican limes, oranges, grapefruit and tangerines into five states, including Texas, to guard against the spread of citrus canker.

But South Texas growers are calling for a more stringent embargo to guard against a potential economic loss of hundreds of millions of dollars.

"If the canker spreads to Texas, it'll make the Medfly and Mexfly look insignificant," said

Les Whitlock, manager of the Texas Valley Citrus Committee. "That's why we'd like to see imports of Mexican citrus stopped for the entire country until we know more about this particular disease strain."

The ban will prevent entry of Mexican citrus only into the five U.S. citrus-growing states. Once sprayed to control the canker, Mexican fruits will be allowed into other states.

The disease weakens trees and reduces production, infecting the fruit. The only recourse is to destroy the tree, or cut it back to the trunk, Whitlock said. So far, it has been found only in the west-central Mexican state of Colima.

"If it spreads to other parts of Mexico, it'll come to Texas," said. "If we get it, we'll be the strictest quarantine there goes an industry several hundred million dollars."

Since August, 129,000 tons of grapefruit, 145,000 tons of oranges, 440,000 tons of tangerines and about 500,000 tons of limes have been shipped to Texas from Mexico.

Rare disease discovered through transfusion

United Press International
A Dallas infant who underwent a blood transfusion shortly after his premature birth is believed to suffer from a mysterious disorder discovered in the gay community — Acquired Immune Deficiency — medical officials said.

The child's case is only one of a handful nationwide in which transfusion recipients have developed.

Alarmed blood bank officials Monday said current screening procedures of donors are inadequate to detect the mysterious ailment.

About 300 people of the 800 documented cases have died of AIDS, said Dr. Harold Jaffe, assistant director of the center task force studying the ailment.

He said early symptoms of AIDS — enlarged lymph glands, low-grade fever and general malaise, are similar to other grade infections. For reason, the condition often undiagnosed.

Researchers believe it suppresses cellular immunity which protects a person from diseases, cancers and fungal infections.

The case of the Dallas infant especially significant because it may help scientists discover how AIDS is transmitted.

"We have not yet decided this infant has AIDS, but the circumstances are suspicious," Kevin Murphy, an infectious disease expert at Southwest Medical Center, told the Dallas Morning News.

Communist math teacher may be fired

United Press International
School officials have recommended firing a high school

math teacher who is an avowed Communist because she obeyed administrative orders and falsified her employment application five years ago.

There was nothing else could come up with," Eubanks said. "Otherwise, why did I dig back 5 and one-half years was clear they could not get on incompetence or anything that effect."

Eubanks said she is a member of the International Committee Against Racism and the Progressive Labor Party.
