Razorbacks topple Frogs in warmup for Cougars

United Press International
There was only one last obstacle in the path of the Arkansas Razorbacks en route to an anticipated showdown with the Houston Cougar.

That roadblock became another victim of Barnhill Arena Wednesday night.

The TCU Horned Frogs, given a decent chance of winning on Arkansas' home floor, were swept aside by the unbeaten Hogs, 69-55.

It was the 23rd consecutive victory at home for Arkansas, which during the last six and a half years has compiled a 95-6 record in Fayetteville.

The victory ran the fifth-ranked Razorbacks' season mark to 14-0, making them one of only two teams in the top 20 with an unbeaten record. They will take a 4-0 Southwest Conference slate to Houston Saturday night for their clash with the Cougars (who are 14-2 for the year, 5-0 in conference play and are ranked 13th).

Arkansas coach Eddie Sutton said, however, that the victory over TCU — because it came at home — was more important than the upcoming game with the Cougars.

"I think we can beat Houston down there and our players believe that," Sutton said. "But if we don't, Houston still has to come to Barnhill in March."

In the only other SWC game played Wednesday night, the Texas Longhorns won their first conference game for coach Bob Weltlich — overcoming the equally struggling Rice Owls, 46-15.

TCU stayed close throughout the first half against Arkansas and was within five points midway through the second period.

But the steady pressure applied by the Razorbacks' defense, combined with the outside shooting of John Snively, wore down the Horned Frogs.

Arkansas opened an 11-point advantage with six minutes to go, but six quick points by TCU brought the Frogs to within five with 3:30 to play.

Guard John Snively scores 14 in Razorbacks' victory

The Razorbacks, however, outscored the Frogs down the stretch, 11-2.

Snively and Alvin Robertson each scored 14 points, while the steady play of Darrell Walker brought him 15 points.

TCU was paced by Darrell Browder with 12 and Doug Arnold with 11.

"We had few turnovers (11), rebounded well and played sound defense," Sutton said. "If we play like we did tonight, we can beat a lot of teams around the country. TCU has good talent. They're as good as anyone we've played. We wore them down a little at the end and that's why the final margin was 14 points."

TCU, which lost by three points at home to Houston last week, is 3-2 in league play and 12-4 overall. And after it was over, Frogs coach Jim Killingsworth said he would not compare the Hogs and Cougars.

"Whichever one plays their game will win," he said.

In Austin, two teams without a conference victory struggled through a poor-shooting night with Texas holding a mere 21-18 halftime lead.

A tip-in by the Longhorns' Carlton Cooper with 30 seconds to go put Texas in front by five. But the Longhorns had to hold on at the end for the one-point victory.

Starting guard Jack Worthington left the Texas squad over the weekend and the Longhorns were forced to start two freshmen. In addition, coach Bob Weltlich put a player into the game — David Willett — who had never scored a point as a collegian despite the fact that he's a junior.

Willett had tried to make the team as a walk-on two years ago and failed. This year, however, he made the roster and scored four points Wednesday night. Two of them were critical free throws with 44 seconds remaining.

Rice now has undisputed possession of the SWC cellar with an 0-5 conference mark, both the Owls and Longhorns are 6-9 for the year.

The next action in the conference does not come until Saturday when, in addition to the Houston-Arkansas game, Baylor will visit TCU, Texas Tech will visit Rice and SMU will go to Texas A&M.

PBS telecast didn't prove its 'findings'

by Milton Richman
UPI Sports Editor

LOS ANGELES — Bookies are like umpires. Nobody likes 'em.

They never take sides — they let you do that. But they take a lot of abuse and ignore it. They're honest. When's the last time you ever heard any of them not paying off 100 cents on the dollar? And they generally call 'em as they see 'em, too.

You should hear what a bookie calls you if you habitually do business with him. You know what he says you are? A degenerate. But he doesn't say that to your face because he has a nice, quiet respect for your cash and would like to see it keep flowing in his direction.

One of the more widely accepted fallacies about bookies is that they never lose. That's not true. Sometimes they do, and sometimes they even have to go to the loan company to borrow money so they can pay you.

They always pay. They have to or they're out of business.

Another fallacy about them is that they have no souls. They do. They even pray, and do you know what they pray for most? An honest game.

Mention the word "fix" to a bookmaker, let him hear any kind of rumble about some players trying to do "business" in a particular game, and it's like driving a stake through his heart. He's the one with the most to lose if a game is fixed.

I didn't bother taking a poll of how many bookmakers watched Monday night's Public Broadcasting Service telecast, the one called "An Unauthorized History of the NFL," but they must have doubled up laughing over the production.

The telecast was supposed to have documented a number of NFL games that were fixed between 1968 and 1970, but it didn't. Nor did it offer any conclusive new evidence or proof that Carroll Rosenbloom, the former owner of the Los Angeles Rams who drowned off the coast of Florida in 1979, might have been murdered by elements of organized crime because of his gambling connections.

The PBS show was the first in a series called "Front Line." It promised startling revelations and then, disappointingly, did not provide so much as one.

The consensus among the people I talked to who watched the telecast was, it was "shallow" and "unconvincing."

According to David Fanning, executive producer of the show, it was meant to be "a commitment to good journalism and fairness," but I don't call it good journalism or fairness when charges are made by a paid informer and aren't supported. That's sounds more like yellow journalism to me.

Where were all the names and dates? Nowhere that I could see. If you went into court with a case like that, it would be thrown out in no time.

Nobody is more opposed to gambling on NFL games than Pete Rozelle. He realizes, however, that gambling is a fact of life and no matter how much he and his security force do to prevent it within the league, there's nothing he can possibly do to stop it outside.

Rozelle said: "The telecast claimed $25 billion is bet on our games. That shows how much confidence the public has in the games. The bookies, too. Do you think they'd handle the games if they felt there was something wrong with them?"

"When they put out a line each week on every game and make minimal changes, up or down as little as a half-point, and depend on the player injury reports they get from us, doesn't that indicate how much faith they have in us?"

Yeah, Pete, and you know how those bookies are. The only one some of them trust is God. Everyone else has to bring cash.
