

It's ours...is not...is too

During the United Way fund drive, Kreuger Hall residents kidnapped the Dunn Hall rocket and held it hostage. Krueger wanted ransom money from Dunn for the safe return of their mascot. The money was going to help support the charity drive.

The men weren't very pleased with the actions of their sister dorm and subsequently both dorm councils became involved in mediating the overblown dispute.

Who says Aggies have a sense of humor?

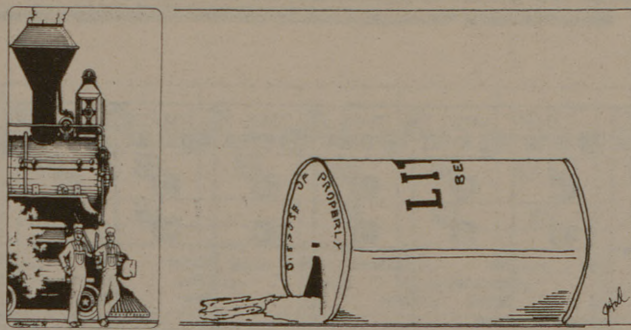

Plus, he forgot the free Pepsi's

What more can be said about football players who attack a meek pizza delivery man, steal his pizza, and throw him down the stairs?
The two Aggie players responsible said it was simply a prank; Jackie Sherrill said he didn't want to talk about it; and several local reporters said they lost just a little respect for the man who leads the Aggies.

Sherrill's handling of the whole ordeal included calling a reporter from the Bryan-College Station Eagle at home to yell at him, having a reporter from the Battalion escorted (nicely, though) out of his office, refusing to speak on the matter, and assorted other public relations' maneuvers.
But nobody said it was going to be easy, did they?

Beer at Northgate is nothing new. Nor is beer on Texas highways. But on Oct. 30, things got a bit out of hand.
8,000 cases of Miller Lite were dumped on University Drive at the Wellborn overpass shortly before 1 a.m., the College Station alcohol curfew.
Although no one was hurt, police guarded the site diligently. Aggies can be fierce when free beer is available.

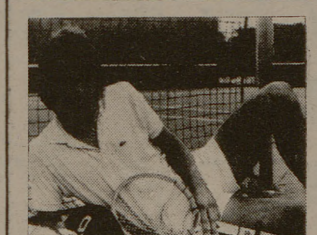

Ever seen a smoking tortilla...

Last October, students were evacuated from Sterling C. Evans Library when smoke and heat from a custodial closet in the building set off the fire alarm.
Students were not permitted into the library for fifteen minutes while officials searched for the source of the fire.
It seems that a tortilla had been left to cook on a hot plate inside the closet.
What else do they do during their breaks?

I scream, you scream, we all score for ice cream

Midway through the Aggies' dismal 5-6 football season, head coach Jackie Sherrill decided the team was being rewarded perhaps a bit too much — especially since they weren't performing up to his usual standards.
The first-year Aggie mentor exercised his contracted right and pulled the plug on the team's refrigerator — one that previously had been stocked with ice cream.
The lack of dessert did not light the fire that Jackie had hoped it would. Instead, it simply fed the imaginations of several sportswriters who buried Jackie and the team in a pile of whipped cream and column inches.
The ice cream episode was just another pot hole in the Aggies' "rocky road" of a season — one that looked as it might turn out "tutti fruity" and ended up as just plain old vanilla.

Eenie, meenie, mynie, moe...

The producers of the Twelve Men of Aggeland calendar deserve a big award for their efforts. They chose 12 men out of 20 candidates to represent the beefcake Twelfth Man on a pin-up calendar.
The scientific researchers approached men at the pool, on campus and in clubs and asked the lucky few if they would be interested.
Did they have to hump it to qualify?
The University of Texas chose their 12 pin-up boys out of more than 400 carefully screened applications.
Does this mean that U.T. has more good looking men than A&M? We certainly hope not. Women, get your transfer applications in early.

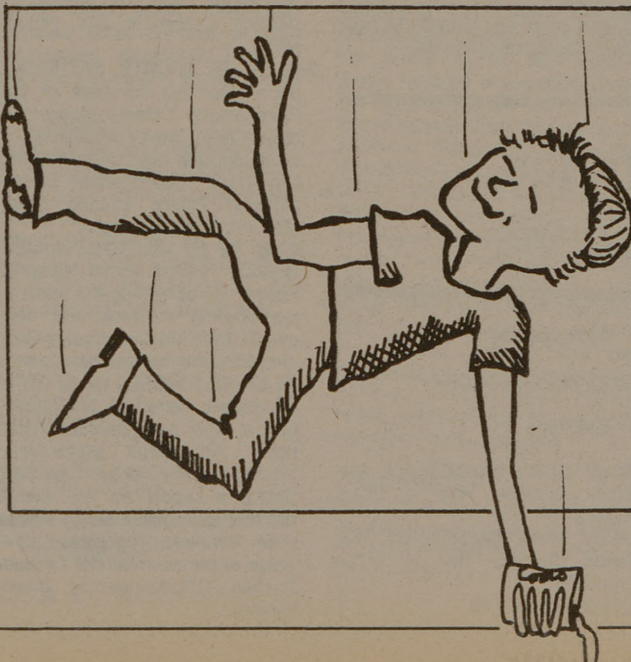

I'm not so think you drunk I am

In November, a Texas A&M freshman fell from a third floor window in Moore Hall, hitting a tree on the way down. Miraculously, he was unhurt.
His roommate said he had been drinking and apparently leaned out the window, passed out and fell to the ground.
Supposedly, the stars were blurry in November.

Butt of the joke

In November, a lookalike parody of The Battalion called "The Battalion" hit the newsstands. And the fan.
The brave authors appeared — with voices electronically garbled, and their faces covered — on a local TV news broadcast explaining why they did it.
For some reason they think we can't take a joke.
But if they ever show their faces around here, we'll ...
