Border students increase

United Press International
BROWNSVILLE — Blamed for many a lost job, the bad border economy now is being credited with what appears to be a spring enrollment increase at area colleges and universities.

Officials at Texas' Southmost College and Pan American University-Edinburg are saying the bad economy is bringing the unemployed back to school and keeping students who normally would transfer to other schools in the Valley.

At least, that's how they're explaining unofficial increases of six to nine percent over spring 1982 enrollments.

One of the reasons is the economy, Juliet Garcia, TSC dean of arts and sciences, said. With few jobs available, the only option is education, she said.

Enrollment figures won't be official until next week, but college and university officials are happy about the current figures.

At Texas Southmost, 4,285 students have enrolled. That is a six percent increase over enrollment in spring 1982, Registrar Edson Johnson said.

At Pan American in Edinburg, 9,104 students have enrolled, a nine percent increase over spring 1982.

"(Enrollment has risen) because of the student who is not able to be away from home," David Zuniga, director of admissions at PAU-E, said. "Now those students who transferred to other institutions are now in the local schools until they see what the economic situation will be."

Pan American University-Brownsville also is reporting a 6.9 percent increase over spring 1982. But admissions dean Vivian Permenter says the university hasn't had an opportunity to analyze its figures.

College officials have another reason for hoping these figures do not change. This is a counting year, which means that the state will base funding on enrollment from the past year. If enrollment from this counting year, which began June 1982, shows a substantial increase over the 1981 counting year, state funding should rise.

College and university officials also attributed the enrollment increase to the quality of programs offered at each institution. TSC's Dr. Garcia said enrollment in new programs, such as Weekend College and the Honors Program, is much higher than expected.

"Forty enrolled in the Honors Program," she said. "It's amazing. We had prayed for 15."
