Bail-out plan sought for Social Security

United Press International
WASHINGTON — House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., opening hearings on a Social Security bail-out plan, warned Tuesday that reaching a compromise "demands that concessions be made on all sides."

The committee is using the $168 billion, seven-year recommendations of the National Commission on Social Security Reform which includes higher payroll taxes, a six-month cost of living freeze, a first benefits tax and a requirement that new federal workers join Social Security.

"Reaching a compromise on Social Security demands that concessions be made on all sides — both in Congress and among special interest groups who oppose certain alternatives," Rostenkowski said in an opening statement before the crowded hearing room.

"Compromise rests on the same spirit of bipartisan cooperation and purpose that prevailed on the commission," Rostenkowski added.

The commission's recommendations wiped out only two-thirds of Social Security's anticipated deficit, and Rostenkowski said he trusts "that Congress will have the steel" to close the rest of the gap. Alternatives include raising the retirement age or imposing a stand-by tax next century.

As the hearings began, with Commission Chairman Alan Greenspan as the lead-off witness, federal employee unions began a saturation advertising campaign on local radio stations protesting the commission's proposal to force new government workers to join Social Security next January.

Greenspan told the hearing that the commission's proposals "should meet any reasonably conceivable shortfalls that could arise for the rest of this decade." But just in case, he urged Congress to follow the panel's recommendation for a "fail-safe mechanism" to automatically balance tax receipts against benefit payments.

He also urged Congress to raise the 65-year retirement age next century, a recommendation endorsed by a commission majority, but not part of its official report.

The commission's recommendations were endorsed by President Reagan, House Speaker Thomas O'Neill and congressional leaders, but criticized by federal workers and groups representing retirees and businessmen. Leaders hope to pass the bill by Easter.

Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, head of the panel's Social Security subcommittee, which next week takes over the issue in hopes of writing a bill by month's end, told reporters Monday that the commission package is a "good beginning point." He warned that if a major part is knocked out, "the whole bill would be in trouble."
