Reagan brass defend '84 budget to media

United Press International
WASHINGTON—President Reagan's top officials are promoting his fiscal 1984 budget as one that will bring economic recovery by curbing federal deficits and putting 1 million unemployed Americans back to work.

Budget director David Stockman said Sunday that the spending plans for 1984 and future years will put a lid on the deficits.

Appearing on CBS' "Face the Nation," Stockman said there is a lot of underlying evidence the economy has turned around. But he warned, "We are threatened by huge out-year deficits that will abort the recovery."

lion unemployed Americans back to work and provide another 500,000 summer jobs for youths.

"Americans would rather have jobs than cash assistance, and it's essential that we help the unemployed regain their jobs," he said.

He said a job voucher program included in Reagan's budget proposal would create as many as 800,000 jobs; a plan to pay subminimum wages to teenagers will give up to 500,000 youths work this summer, and a $240 million program to retrain displaced workers will put another 100,000 people back to work.

He defended Reagan's plans to continue a massive military buildup, and spoke out against repealing the third-year tax cut due this summer, stressing they cannot be held responsible for the $189 billion deficit projected in the spending plan.

Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, in an interview in U.S. News and World Report, said the budget will put nearly 1 mil-

Donovan said although Reagan has proposed a $1.9 billion extension of unemployed insurance benefits, his chief aim is to put Americans back to work and that only can be done through economic growth.

"In a very important way, the administration has already attacked unemployment by doing all the difficult things that Ronald Reagan said he would do: work to stop the hemorrhaging in the budget, lower interest rates, reduce unnecessary regulation and so on," Donovan said.

Stockman, asked about the nation's 11.4 million unemployed, said, "The best thing we can do is achieve a modest recovery" by following Reagan's prescription.

Stockman denied the red ink swirling through Washington is a result of the failure of Reagan's supply-side economic policies.

The immediate problem, Stockman said, was created by major unanticipated developments — a recession longer and deeper than predicted; sharply lower inflation, which cut government revenues; high interest rates that jacked up the cost of bankrolling the national debt; and failure of Congress to cut domestic spending as much as Reagan wanted.

The $848.5 billion 1984 spending plan sent to Congress last week forecasts high deficits into the near future, what Stockman and others fiscal aficionados call the "out years." Based on the administration's projections, the deficit in 1987 will be $117 billion.

Lucky developer may get U.S. rent rip-off

United Press International
WASHINGTON—A private developer may get a $1.5 million rent windfall at taxpayers' expense because the firm withdrew an option for extra office space for the U.S. Information Agency. The withdrawal came just days before the agency decided it needed more room in its new quarters.

The developer, a partnership headed by the Donohoe Construction Co., then was able to nearly double its price in what some General Services Administration officials are calling an embarrassing government blunder.

GSA officials, several of whom have worked closely with Gaskins in the past, failed to exercise the option at $16 a square foot before leasing the rest of the Donohoe-built building last Oct. 1.

When USIA director Charles Wick, a confidant of President Reagan, requested an additional 11,250 square feet for a first-floor library, Donohoe raised its price for the ground-floor retail space to $29.35 a square foot.

Over 10 years, the rent difference for the extra space would total nearly $1.5 million.

could force USIA to look elsewhere for added space after spending millions of dollars to move into the building to consolidate its quarters.

In the case of the new quarters for the USIA, the government chose not to conduct competitive bidding before signing a 10-year, $57 million lease with Donohoe for the bulk of the nine-story structure.

One GSA official called the lease a "high pressure deal" rushed because White House aides Michael Deaver and Edwin Meese were aiding Wick in pushing the consolidation of USIA's scattered offices.

The officials also want to know if Donohoe may have obtained advance knowledge of the added space needs because one of its negotiators, Richard Gaskins, is a retired GSA leasing official.

One GSA real estate official said privately that if the failure to exercise the option for the added space "wasn't planned, it was awfully poor judgment on the part of GSA," which should have had a better fix on the space needs.

Richard Haase, commissioner of GSA's Public Buildings Service, told UPI he will only accept the extra space at the original price. But that decision where for added space after spending millions of dollars to move into the building to consolidate its quarters.

Gaskins and a Donohoe vice president, William Walsh III, denied knowing about USIA's added space needs before withdrawing the $16 option on Oct. 6, 1982, five days after the lease took effect, locking the government into the rest of the building. Government officials insisted they did not divulge such information to the company.

Chief Justice asks for a new court

United Press International
NEW ORLEANS—Arguing that the quality of American justice is at stake, Chief Justice Warren Burger is asking Congress to create a new federal court to decide some of the Supreme Court's cases.

Burger said the flow of cases is so overwhelming that the Supreme Court is threatened with a "breakdown of the system, or of some of the justices." But patchwork remedies cannot solve the problem, he said.

"It is the most important single, immediate problem facing the judicial branch," he said.

Denying he was "crying wolf," the nation's top judge recommended setting up a temporary panel of judges to settle conflicting rulings among the circuit courts of appeal, and perhaps disputes over federal statutes.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, like Burger, addressing the American Bar Association's annual mid-winter meeting Sunday, made a similar proposal for a new court.

"There is no one single, permanent solution," O'Connor said. "Each time the court's case load increases, congressional action is necessary to make some significant change in the court's jurisdiction or its procedures to reduce the numbers. It's been 58 years since the last major changes."

Burger's proposal, made at his annual State of the Judiciary address, was the first endorsement he has made of such a major change to reduce the court's case burden, a topic that eight of the nine justices have spoken about publicly since last summer.

A senior justice department official, reacting to Burger's suggestion, said the court could "solve a lot of its own problems" by not writing so many opinions. "Many justices also write separate opinions agreeing or disagreeing with the main decision in a case."

But Burger maintains fundamental changes are needed to give "proper time for reflection" to preserve the traditional quality of decisions, and avoid a breakdown of the system.

Burger says the "tidal wave" of cases coming to the court—more than 4,000 last term—will continue to increase to as many as 9,000 a year. Cases are becoming increasingly complex, and the justices are turning out 20 percent more opinions than they were 30 years ago.

Under Burger's proposal, a new court would be created in five years and could be terminated by Congress, which has created other specialized federal courts.
