

THE MSC PRESENTS

Twice weekly, the MSC will advertise its events on this page. Look for ours ads every Monday and Thursday, and plan your calendar around the many exciting things going on at your student union.

Although Eugene Fodor's success seems to have happened overnight, he has actually been a student of the violin since age seven. He won four first prize honors in local competitions and at age 11 made his debut with the Denver Symphony.

Later Eugene studied at the University of Southern California, Juilliard, Meadowmount and Indiana University. He collected further awards, including in 1972 first prize in the International Paganini Violin Competition. During this period his teachers included the legendary Jascha Heifetz.

Since his victory at Moscow's Tchaikovsky International Competition, he has performed in virtually all the music capitals of the world, winning acclaim from audiences and critics alike. His numerous television appearances have fostered a broader public for classical music and have created a constant demand for his recordings.

"His studies with Heifetz have given him a remarkable command of his instrument plus a full powerful tone . . ."

London Times

"... excellent technical control . . . a sensitive musician, willing to bend his technique to the service of the composer . . ."

The New York Times

"A stupendous technique even by today's standards and with a very definite musical personality."

Gramophone

"The man is clearly one of the great, he has the world at his feet. Put in its most significant light, his career has filled the youthful superstar slot, which for years has remained an aching void . . ."

Hi Fidelity/Musical America

"A mature fiddler of immense talent, Fodor is one Russian prize winner who lives up to his advance publicity. . . When the encores were over . . . there was no question of the advent of a major performer."
