Convict stabs fellow inmates

United Press International
CHESTER, Ill. — A convicted killer with a "lust for murder" may have stabbed mass sex slayer John Wayne Gacy and another death row inmate in hopes of postponing his own date with the electric chair, authorities say.

The Menard Correctional Center was placed on lockdown status Tuesday after Gacy, 43, killer of 33 young men and boys, was stabbed once in the upper left arm, said Nic Howell, state Department of Corrections spokesman.

William Jones, 28, of Mount Vernon, convicted last year in the stabbing death of an elderly woman, suffered superficial wounds to the head in the incident, Howell said.

Gacy and Jones were taken to the prison infirmary for treatment and later returned to their cells, said prison officials who were searching for the weapon, believed to be a sharpened wire.

Howell said the attacker, Henry Brisbon, 27, convicted of four murders including the death of an inmate, broke away from a security officer who was accompanying him to the law library on the second tier of the death row unit.

Although he was tackled by the security officer almost immediately, Howell said, Brisbon was able to stab Gacy and Jones, who were outside their cell during a routine cleaning of the unit.

Brisbon was being questioned by prison authorities out a variety of motives, including his remark to guards he would continue to kill so emeralds would keep him out of the electric chair, Howell said.

He said Brisbon could face both criminal and administrative charges in the incident.

"He's a ferocious animal who enjoys human suffering," Michael Ficaro, who presided over Brisbon in the shotgun slaying of three people along Interstate 57 in Cook and Will counties June 1973.

Brisbon was sentenced to death last year after being convicted of using a sharp knife to handle from a soup ladle to inmate Richard Morgan in October 1978 at the State Correctional Center near Joplin where he was serving a sentence of 1,000 to 3,000 years for 11-57 slayings.

Execution dates for Brisbon and Jones have not been pending their appeals.

Jones was convicted in 1982 of the stabbing death of Margaret Dare and the wounding of her husband James, in a January 1982 invasion near Dix.
