

★ Ag News ★

Members of the Cut-and-Shoot A&M Mothers' Club took control of 500 Texas A&M classes today to wipe out rampant liberalism on the campus.

Club President Shirley U. Jest said the club believed anti-traditionalist professors were ruining Texas A&M.

"We can't have these people filling our babies' little minds with those society thoughts," Jest said. "That could be dangerous and destroy A&M."

"As teachers, we're focusing on teaching students — using clearly understandable English — important values about life at A&M: how to keep traditions, how to write letters to The Battalion, how to write letters home to mother, how to wash your clothes and how to eat properly," Jest said.

The Texas A&M Department of English, in an effort to upgrade the program on campus, has announced that it will abolish Howdy Week and replace it with "Folksy Salutations." Students are encouraged to use this phrase whenever possible.

The Class of '84 announced today that it will present Texas A&M with an eternal fire extinguisher.

Class officers said the gift symbolizes the Class of '84's desire "to make sure the place doesn't burn down."

Class president Squeak E. Klean said: "Aggies always should be prepared for an emergency. We thought that because of the 'eternal flame' on campus, we should have an eternal fire extinguisher, just in case."

"We'll get chemistry seniors to build it to save money," he said.

The fire extinguisher will be located in a glass case near the Memorial Student Center.

The Traditions Council will hold a Traditions Update Forum tomorrow morning to bring Texas A&M traditions up-to-date. Topics to be discussed include:

- Designating the concrete around the Memorial Student Center as a memorial to an eternal waiting line at the MSC check cashing center.

ATHLETES: Why take chances? The Alpha Beta Chi sorority will provide an escort service for athletes at night. We will escort you anywhere on campus. For further information, contact Muffy at The House.

The Student Conference on Nocturnal Affairs will be held April 22. Students interested in learning the sleeping and other night-time habits of other countries are invited to participate. The topic for this year's conference is "What to Do in Moscow After Midnight." Students participating in the conference may find the conference very useful. See story on page 3.

CLOWN HALL: Members of Clown Hall have announced their latest megaproject — a Beatles reunion.

Joking, Clown Hall president, said the group expects few problems in the future.

"We're asking how a concert by the Beatles would be possible since John Lennon has been dead for two years. Joking said: "Details, details, details. We can work out any problems."

CRIMES: The following crimes were reported during the weekend.

A talking Coke machine was charged with disturbing the peace after playing obscenities at passers-by.

A student was caught passing notes to his neighbor in class. His hand was caught and he will remain after school the rest of the week cleaning erasers.

A student was apprehended taking more than one napkin at Sbsia Dining Center last night. As punishment, he was forced to eat a double serving of the "Surprise." He is in critical condition at the A. P. Beutel Health Center.

A mass smuggling operation has been uncovered at the Sterling C. Evans Center. A group of about 15 students were apprehended while sneaking in Cheetos from the lounge into the group study area.

A group of broken blue bodies and mangled pink flesh was all that was left at the Chicken following a rumble between the Smurfs and the Strawberry Gang. The fight broke out when Lemon Meringue accused Papa Smurf of fathering her illegitimate child.

— Compiled by Rebeca Zimmermann

weatherscope

Today's clear skies make you want to eat everything. Watch for trolls.

As usual for the water, expect rain. That old black rain continues to follow you back home.

Go back home.

Cold and clammy. Don't fall for the same old line. Tee hee hee.

You hotheads should expect a bang. Avoid confrontations. You're likely to butt into trouble.

Tell your friends that skies will be partly cloudy. Today you talk, people listen.

Expect lightning and thunder. Or sleet and snow. Or tornadoes and hurricanes. Or famines and pestilence. Or ham and eggs. Or that. Or the other.

Cancer: Terminal clouds.

Leo: You might want to use extra hairspray, because your mane most likely will be windblown in the gusts and gales prevailing today. Avoid thorns.

Virgo: Say no.

Libra: No justice in your forecast: expect hail, followed by flash fires, followed by winds, followed by tidal waves. That's the breaks.

Scorpio: Stinging wind and rain. Serves you right, you nasty little critter.

Sagittarius: Who broke my heart, you did, you did. Right from the start, you bet, you bet. Shoot that poison arrow through my hear-ear-art. (It's gonna rain.)

Snapshots

Texas A&M researchers announced today that they now can breed sheep with plastic skin. The sheep, bred for their maroon color and ATM logo, will be used to make Fightin' Texas Aggie raincoats.

The Aggie Rag

6 pages Vol. I, Only 1 March 21, 1983

Way to go, Snowy!

Ali, Ant new regents

by Gary Barker
Aggie Rag Staff

In a somewhat less than surprising move yesterday, Gov. Snowy White replaced his three original Texas A&M regent appointees with neopunk rocker Adam Ant, boxer Muhammad Ali and College Station housewife Myrtle Crabtree.

"I think my new appointments more accurately reflect the needs and desires of Texas A&M," White said during a press conference.

"Adam Ant will bring the University the 'World Class' status it wants," White said. "And besides, he's cute."

White said the new regent choices were not entirely his. B.S. "Ultra" Brite, chairman of the Texas A&M Board of Regents, recommended the names to White and he agreed.

"Ultra was absolutely right," White said. "Ali would give the University the fighting image it needs and Myrtle, well, you should taste her pecan pie."

Muhammad Ali

Adam Ant

Myrtle Crabtree

Ali said, "I am the greatest and with my help Texas A&M can be the greatest. We can be the greatest."

A System official, who asked to remain nameless for reasons of personal health, said he heard that Texas A&M President Francesco Vanducci and Ali already have been in fisticuffs over the adjective for Aggieland — whether the University should be a "world university" or "the greatest."

Vanducci reportedly lost the first round.

When asked what changes he would like to see at Texas A&M, Ali said that he would like to see boxing made a varsity sport on a par with football.

When told that that might not get overwhelming regent support, Ali said: "I float like a butterfly, I sting like a bee. Who on that board is gonna stand up to me?"

See related story, page 3

Ant, who was easy to spot in his usual pirate costume, said he was "jolly glad" to be appointed regent.

"I love all the snappy uniforms here," Ant said. "I hope I didn't underdress for the meeting."

Ant said his first official act as regent would be to obtain a saber from the Corps.

Ant said he had written a new song, called "AntRegent," to commemorate his appointment.

"It goes like this: 'So unplug those old fogies and do yourself a favor. That regent's lost his hair, so try another flavor, AntRegent,'" Ant sang.

Hearing the song, Brite ran into the room and joined in the chorus.

When asked what changes he would like to see at Texas A&M, Ant said: "You don't drink, don't smoke! What do you do?"

"I would say that subtle innuendos follow, if you know what I mean. I want to see more of those innuendos at A&M. Everyone needs more innuendos."

Crabtree, White's second housewife appointment to a state board, said she was pleased to be appointed.

"I think the decorations in here (the regents' quarters) are as purty as a picture," Crabtree said. "But they need a woman's touch."

Crabtree said her first official act as regent would be to vacuum the regents' annex.

"I think students need better meals," she said. "I want to see the food quality upgraded. And I want to see those dorm rooms cleaned up and the students in bed by midnight. You just wait until your father gets home."

When questioned at today's meeting of the Texas A&M Board of Regents, Brite said he welcomed the appointment of Ant.

"He put near plays the best banjo west of the Pecos," Brite said. "The musical quality at the meetings will be greatly improved from now on."

One University official, who asked that his name not be used so he could continue to feed his family, said that Ant and Brite are working on an album, tentatively titled, "The A's and B's of Regent Rock."

"I understand the two are as close as two ants in an ant farm," the official said.

Ali said at today's meeting that he was glad to be appointed.

"Oh, yeah, I'm glad to be a regent,"

Pizza deliverer nabbed by UFO

by Denise Richter and Gary Barker
Aggie Rag Staff

A dazed pizza delivery boy for Snake-Eyes Pizza was found yesterday in a pasture near North Zulch after being shanghaied for a traumatic three days by aliens from the Andromeda galaxy.

Ann Chovie, a spokesperson for Snake-Eyes, said the delivery boy, whose name is being withheld pending the arrest of the aliens, was sent to deliver a pizza to a phone booth north of campus Thursday.

"We thought it was strange when he didn't come back after three days, but we didn't think he'd skip to another galaxy," Chovie said.

The delivery boy said that when he reached the phone booth, he found it empty. But as he returned to his car, he was flooded with "this really bright light."

The delivery boy said he passed out and when he woke up he was inside the UFO. He described the aliens as being about 8-foot-3, dark black hair, about 325 pounds, large ears and "these really clean white gloves."

He said they repeatedly demanded that he guide them to a mushroom farm where they could get hallucinogenic mushrooms.

"Evidently they experimented with mushrooms when they worked undercover in Southern California," the pizza boy said. "They wanted more and they thought our pizza had them."

"I'm happy to say our pizzas use only the finest mushrooms, not those druggie kind. Those guys were really wacked-out liberals."

Police discovered that the delivery boy was missing when they saw an insulated pizza carrier falling from the sky.

See related ad, page 3

"I thought the sky was falling," University police officer Chico N. Little said. "But it was just this insulation. We filed the usual Unidentified-Insulated-Pizza-Carrier-Falling-From-the-Sky Report and got the license of the saucer."

Little said they traced the plates to a small planet near the center of the Andromeda Galaxy.

Police said they thought chances were slim that the pizza boy would be recovered until Saturday when a Snake-Eyes pizza carton fell through a barn on a farm just north of Bryan.

Although the box was slightly charred from re-entry into the atmosphere, a message scrawled on the box was still legible.

Written in pizza sauce was the message: "Help, have been abducted by mushroom-hungry aliens. Send help. Send mushrooms. Send the National Enquirer."

Radar specialists in the O&M Building tried to trace the path of the saucer on Saturday, but had little luck.

"Vee lost zee zaucer ven dey turned left at Jupiter," said Dr. N.D. Ozone, a Nobel prize-winning radar specialist.

Ozone was recruited from the University of California at Berkeley after he won the prize for rescuing Chinese food deliverers from the hands of the dreaded Won-Ton Wascals from Wsythgs, just south of Alpha Centauri.

When told of the size of the alien Texas A&M Athletic Director Jock Shorts said he would send out a scout ship.

"As far as I know, recruiting from another galaxy doesn't violate NCAA regulations," Shorts said.

Vanducci tells all! See page 2.

Minority students for hire? See exclusive story, page 4.

Another one bites the dust in sports. See page 5.