

national Ex-drug dealer turns informant

United Press International
NEW YORK — He was the drug king of Harlem who once boasted he was "Mr. Untouchable." Now, in prison, Leroy "Nicky" Barnes has become a prince among government informers.

Barnes says he is weary of prison and wants to get out the only way he can — by presidential pardon. That is the reason he gave for turning government informer.

Barnes' information has put nine of his former drug-dealing associates and the woman who bore two of his four children behind bars.

Because of his new vocation, he said, some of his former associates want him hit.

The government said his old buddies last week put out a $1 million murder contract on 50-year-old Barnes.

However, a defense attorney for the former Barnes' associates denied the contract charge.

"Next to Ronald Reagan, Mr. Barnes is probably the most protected man in the country. It would be utterly ridiculous for these people to attempt anything like this," he said.

Barnes self-portrayal as "Mr. Untouchable" aroused indignation. According to some, the word went out from the White House to the Justice Department to get Barnes.

And get him they did. He was hauled into federal court in Manhattan and convicted on charges that he headed a ring which peddled 44 pounds of heroin a month for about seven years.

He was sentenced in 1978 to life in prison without parole.

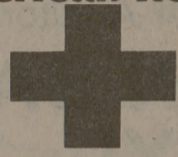

Last week Barnes emerged in public as a witness for the prosecution. He testified in court in Manhattan at a minor narcotics trial of a young man he helped indict.

Barnes told an attentive audience that he had decided to turn government informer just a year ago.

He also told how he set up a "Council of Seven" consisting of himself and six independent heroin dealers to control drug distribution in the New York area. Barnes said he got irked when he learned his former girlfriends had taken up with his buddies on the "Council of Seven."

That, he said, was why he revealed them and their heroin activities — that and his hope of an eventual pardon.
