Baptist groups feud over Israel policy

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Feuding factions of Southern Baptist moderates and conservatives are organizing for another showdown. But politics — especially attitudes toward Israel — may replace the Bible as the battleground.

Conservatives plan to fight for a resolution strongly backing the state of Israel when the 13.4-million-member church meets in Pittsburgh in early June.

In the past, conservatives have generally sought to use the issue of Biblical inerrancy — the idea the Bible is without error in all matters, including historical and scientific — as the forum for their battle and to impose inerrancy as a creedal position on the fiercely individualistic denomination.

The Israeli resolution is likely to be just as fiercely fought by moderates and denominational officials, particularly from the influential Foreign Mission Board.

According to board officials the resolution — first raised at last year's meeting in New Orleans and twice defeated by messengers (delegates) — already has created problems for missionaries in some parts of the Arab world.

Norris J. Sydnor, Oxon Hill, Md., who headed the resolutions committee, has announced he will reintroduce the resolution at the Pittsburgh convention.

The resolution expresses the denomination's strong support for Israel and urges the U.S. government to "publicly and privately assure Israel and her enemies of such support."

The resolution introduced in New Orleans also said that "God's prophetic program as presented in the scriptures includes the present State of Israel as part of God's completion of all things."

Sydnor made the announcement at a "National Prayer Breakfast in Honor of Israel" sponsored by the Roundtable, a major Religious Right organization founded by Baptist layman Ed McAteer.

After the New Orleans convention, McAteer said his greatest disappointment in the meeting was its failure to pass the pro-Israel resolution.

In addition, independent Baptist Jerry Falwell, who is not a member of the Southern Baptist Convention but whose Moral Majority political action organization influences many Southern Baptist conservatives, has made support of Israel a key part of his Moral Majority political action committee.

But R. Keith Parks, head of the Foreign Mission Board, said it is his "sincere prayer" that the resolution never get to the floor in Pittsburgh.

"Much attention is given in many countries, even in the secular press, when Christian groups speak on political matters," Parks said.

He said passage of the resolution "will cause us to be fied politically in such a way that would jeopardize the work and safety of the many parts of the world.

Multiplied millions of Middle East as well as parts of the world, would interpret the as implying opposition to our people.

"Understandably, we be reluctant to welcome sentatives whom their enemies of their own ment," he said.

There are some 3.2 million Baptist missionaries in the world.

Parks has picked one important conservative, the Rev. Adrian Rogers, former Southern Baptist convention president.

Rogers said any resolution would have been "wisely written" it would be a threat to Southern Baptist missionaries in Arab countries.

Although the resolution promises to be one of the battlegrounds in the between conservatives and moderates, it is unlikely to be one.

Both moderates and conservatives already have been organizing for the convention and the perennial issue of authority and the moral decision of the Convention President Rogers has posed school prayer are certain to create controversy.

Limiting care unit use seen

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Americans spend between $10 billion and $20 billion for intensive care in hospitals each year, and a panel of specialists suggests substantial savings could be made by limiting admissions to those most likely to benefit from intensive care treatment.

The 16-member panel, a group assembled by the National Institutes of Health, said limited intensive care unit resources should not be used by those who don't have a "reasonable prospect of significant recovery."

And the committee said that it is not appropriate to maintain a patient in intensive care when his prognosis is "one of persistent vegetative state" or when only the natural process of death would be prolonged.

But the panel said that intensive care units do save lives, particularly for those with acute reversible diseases.

Common examples include patients temporarily unable to breathe because of drug overdose and those with heart disturbances that can be corrected by the use of pacemakers.

"These patients clearly benefit from ICU care," the report said.

But the panel said there is another group of patients for whom the potential benefit of intensive care units is not as clear. Patients in this group include those suffering from circulatory failure due to infection or heart failure and those not critically ill but having low risk complications of their illnesses.

The panel called for studies to better determine who should be admitted to intensive care units.
