Train arrives at nuclear base despite protestors

United Press International
BANGOR, Wash. — Twelve white boxcars believed laden with 100 nuclear warheads rolled into the nation's Trident submarine base, but protestors declared a moral victory in making public the train's four-day trek across the West.

 The 12 boxcars, bracketed by two turreted security cars, sat silently inside the Naval submarine base on Hood Canal which is home port of the nation's fleet of Trident submarines. Each submarine is capable of destroying all major and moderate-sized cities in the Soviet Union.
 The cargo was delivered Tuesday after passing through the final gathering of antinuclear activists who lined most of the train's route from Amarillo to Bangor, Wash.
 Six protestors, including a nun, were arrested just outside the base Tuesday, marking the third time authorities were forced to take action against demonstrators.
 Several people tried to walk in front of the train, dubbed the "Armageddon Express," as it swept by the crowd of about 150 demonstrators.
 Olof Sundin, 39, a man from Bellevue, Wash., to jump in front of the train was held down by police until the train passed.
 Sundin was charged with interfering with a train and arrested.
 Those taken into custody were charged with obstructing a railway and without bond. They will be in jail for 90 days and a fine if convicted.
 "It's not really a victory," it's a step on the way," said Wesley Douglas, who along with his husband Jim runs the Zero Center for Non-Violence that organized the country protest.
 The Rev. Paul Noth Lutheran minister from Tappan, Wash., compared the train with those that Jews to their deaths in concentration camps during World War II.
 Government officials say whether the train carried warheads, also Washington state officials were told the train carried "missiles" or "missile parts."
 The warheads were destined for the Michigan, the second-class submarine, which Bangor last week, armed with 24 warhead nuclear missiles being launched on its mission.
