Cadets

eats within a certain amount of time.

Another test freshmen must prepare for is campusology. The cadet must learn facts about the campus and the Corps and its history. During inspections, he is questioned about Aggie trivia, upcoming football games and how many days there are until Final Review or Spring Break.

Many people have never heard about some of the facts, Holmes said. For example, cadets may be asked the location of the hidden University, which is an emblem on a smokestack near the physical plant. The emblem was covered by paint several years ago.

Holmes said the campusology test helps build a sense of history and pride in the campus and the Corps.

Freshmen are allowed certain duties that they consider priileges. It's a freshman responsibility to keep the Lawrence Sullivan Ross statue by the Academic Building polished. It also is a freshman band member's privilege to shine his class number and "BQ" on the dome of the Academic Building.

Holmes said he knew about many of the traditions before he came to Texas A&M so he had a good attitude about it.

"Some of the incoming freshmen didn't know about the traditions and it was a difficult and challenging year," Holmes said. "However, the freshmen do get a chance to get back at the upperclassmen eventually."

One of the ways is stealing an outfit's commanding officer's possessions — all of them. The outfit cleans out of the officer's room, hides his possessions and then bargains with him for privileges in exchange for their return.

Holmes said as a freshman he often got back at one by showing up at the shower before him and using his showerhead before he got to it.

He also would confuse perclassmen by wearing one day and glasses the other would introduce himself wearing glasses so upperclassmen would not recognize him. When a classman doesn't recognize a freshman he should introduce himself.

Haddock said now that sophomore he is treated better.

"You're treated like a being when you're a more," he said. "You're when you're a freshman."

When you're a freshman can being a sophomore, but of a sophomore is more than that of a freshman. Cadets who make it a senior year are awarded senior privileges. A senior can "stand on the wood aluminum bleachers — Field, is allowed the knowledge of certain may walk on grass, "Beat the Class of '83 (anything)."
