Senator says no way to waste storage site

United Press International SHREVEPORT, La. — A Louisiana senator says radioactive wastes will not be stored at a north Louisiana salt dome, and the site legally will be banned from future consideration as a waste repository. The Vacherie salt dome, which straddles the Webster-Bienville parish line, is at the bottom of a list of five potential storage sites, Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., said Wednesday. Once dropped from that group, the dome legally will be eliminated from future dump site searches. "They are not going to store nuclear waste in Vacherie," he said. The Energy Department announced Tuesday the Vacherie dome was among sites in six states under consideration to become the nation's first high-level nuclear waste repository. In the fall, the department will nominate three or four sites for extensive study to determine their suitability for nuclear waste dumps. The state also holds power virtue of an earlier agreement to veto a federal decision to store nuclear wastes in the dome, the agreement is not a binding contract, Johnston said.

Brake repair plans OK'd for 240,000 GM X-cars

United Press International DETROIT — General Motors Corp. has reached an agreement with a federal agency on repairs for 240,000 X-cars whose brakes can lock, causing the autos to swerve dangerously or spin out. Buick Skylark, Chevrolet Citation, Oldsmobile Omega and Pontiac Phoenix models with manual transmissions and some cars with automatic transmissions are involved in the recall, GM announced Wednesday. GM said it was sending letters to dealers with instructions for repairs. Letters will be sent to owners next Monday and they can take their cars for free repairs starting April 25.

Baby born of dead mother

United Press International SAN FRANCISCO — A team of 100 doctors, nurses and medical technicians delivered a healthy 3-pound boy Tuesday from a woman legally dead for two months, proving there is almost no limit to the time a mother's body can be sustained by life-support systems to save a fetus. The baby was born by Caesarian section nine weeks prematurely at the University of California Hospital. Doctors said Wednesday the boy had an excellent chance of survival. The mother was 22 weeks pregnant when, on Jan. 24, she suffered a seizure, apparently caused by a brain cyst. When her brain stopped functioning, she was declared legally dead. Life support systems were used in hopes of saving the child. "I wasn't optimistic about the baby," said Dr. Robert Creasy, a professor of obstetrics at the medical center. "I thought it was too early in the pregnancy for the baby to survive." Now, Creasy said, he and other physicians believe there is "potentially no limit" to the time a woman's body can be supported to save a fetus in similar cases. The hospital declined to identify the family at the request of the father. But a spokesman said the woman was in her mid-20s and "very healthy" until her seizure. The father and parents of the woman elected to keep the mother's body on life-support systems and to remove them after the birth. When the systems were removed she stopped breathing immediately. The decision to take the baby nine weeks before full term was made because the fetus "did not seem to be growing any more and the odds of it being born healthy were extremely good," Creasy said.
