Bowie gets mixed review

David Bowie's first single from the soon-to-be-released album, "Let's Dance," is a mid-tempo song that effectively mixes sounds from the 50s with those of the 80s. Co-produced by Nile Rodgers of Chic, the single "Let's Dance," keeps a steady bass line beat sparsely punctuated with keyboard and guitar. Bowie's vocals are comparable to his recent albums — slightly strained, heavily anguished. With the addition of congas, saxophone and a Beach

Boys vocal opening, the song becomes a possible dance hit.

The album version is twice as long as the single with added sax and guitar solos and more than enough room for re-mixing. The single doesn't have the radio appeal of Soft Cell's "Tainted Love," but will certainly appeal to Bowie fans and rock club audiences alike.

On the flip side is a speeded-up version of "Putting out Fire" from the movie, Cat People. The soundtrack was chiefly a mood piece heavily infused with synthesizer (it was co-written with Giorgio Moroder), but this is straight-forward rock cut with a great guitar hook.
