Burned child speaks

United Press International
 IRVINE, Calif. — A Brooklyn, N.Y., boy, 6, able to speak for the first time since he was burned over 90 percent of his body, has asked to see his father — who admitted setting the boy ablaze.

Little David Rothenberg still doesn't know how he got into the hospital. He doesn't know he was burned when the motel room he shared with his father erupted into flames.

Charles Rothenberg has admitted he intended to kill David and himself in their motel room because his ex-wife said she would not let him visit the boy again, but he panicked and ran from the flaming room. David was rescued from the fire by another guest.

Lottery mystery resolved

United Press International
 HARRISBURG, Pa. — A retiree, 77, who quietly has held onto a lottery ticket worth $5.6 million since December, plans to share the record jackpot with jobless steelworkers and retarded children. Ending months of speculation about the mystery winner that began when a steelworker was charged with falsely claiming the ticket was stolen, Pascal Cervi of Aliquippa, Pa., had his ticket verified Friday and accepted the first of 21 annual payments.

Lottery officials said the Dec. 17 Pennsylvania Lotto prize is the largest in state history and may be the most ever won by an individual in the nation.

"It's too big," said Cervi, his hand trembling from his malady as he calmly accepted the check of $211,544.32 from Gov. Dick Thornburgh.

A frail-looking man who wears spectacles, he spent 41 years working for Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. in Aliquippa, an area 30 miles northwest of Pittsburgh ravaged by high unemployment.

He named food banks for jobless steelworkers and schools for mentally retarded children as definite beneficiaries of the largess.

"There's going to be a lot of charity involved," said Cervi, who told lottery officials he also expects to use some of the winnings for his medical care.

Noting his wife of 49 years, Adeline, 74, was the only other person until Thursday who knew he held the winning ticket, Cervi said he would put his first check "in a safe place." Cervi, who has no children, has not yet designated a special heir for the checks that come once a year until Dec. 2003.

Cervi said he delayed accepting the jackpot because he feared the windfall would overshadow his quiet family Christmas.

By the time he was ready to present the ticket, steelworker Lewis Bedillion Jr. had claimed the winning ticket was stolen from his home. Police charged Bedillion, also of Aliquippa, with making a false report.

Cervi said Bedillion's claim made him question whether he had misread the numbers on his own stub, and later he might be accused of having stolen the winning ticket.

"Income tax day is next week," Cervi said in explaining his decision to finally step forward. "You can't wait too long or you'll have to pay those penalties."

He said he used an old-fashioned bingo machine rescued from a trash heap to pick winning numbers: 5-2738-28.

Computers now filing clerks

United Press International
 Yet another job now performed by human beings may soon be filled by computers. The latest casualty of the microchip onslaught: the file clerk.

Documents and correspondence are organized and stored by the same methods that have been used for centuries, manual collating, alphabetizing and filing. This painstaking task has persisted despite advances in office computers because it is both costly and time consuming to type entire documents into a computer's memory. Graphics and picture images are difficult to read and thus encode.

But the April issue of Science Digest reports that IBM is developing what it calls a document analysis system that can read printed pages and automatically encode their text and graphics into a digital language. "Documents are simply scanned into the machine, and a few seconds a computer has scanned and permanently stored contents. Minutes or even hours later, the machine can be instructed to recall and retype file in whole or in part," a magazine article says.

"We're trying to teach a machine to read any document at all," says computer scientist Richard Casey of IBM. "It could be in good shape in the future. The basic technology is already worked out."

Broiled fish retains protein

United Press International
 NEW YORK — University research indicates broiled fish retains more protein and other nutrients than baked, pan fried or poached.

University of Rhode Island researchers found broiled fish retained almost 100 percent of the protein levels in the raw fish. Baked fish lost about 6 percent, they found, and pan fried lost the most.

Broiled fish lost more moisture and fat than some other methods, but came ahead in retention of B vitamins, most of the trace minerals and overall acceptability.

The results were reported in the New York office of the University Cooperative Extension.
