

Informant program blasted by ACLU

United Press International
LEWISVILLE—Officials at a Texas school insist their efforts for expelling 14 students do not amount to a drug-snitch program, but civil rights groups blasted the widely publicized campaign, calling it unconstitutional and harmful. Despite this, educators across the state say they were studying the Lewisville High School program of using paid informants to help them combat the epidemic of youth drug abuse.

Lewisville is doing what it can in Lewisville," said Jim Smith, PTA coordinator for the "War on Drugs," a state-wide campaign founded and funded by Dallas computer magnate H. Ross Perot.

There are 2,200 kids in Lewisville," he said. "It's their right to go to school in a safe environment. It must be protected. In this case, the principal has been courageous and determined. It seems like a good program for the situation in that city. A lot of educators are looking at it."

Yet it is the use of informant money that inflames critics.

"If money is not the heart and soul of the program, then do away with it," said Jack Novik, assistant director of the American Civil Liberties Union in New York. "But they can't do away with it, because they wouldn't get the same response."

And the response has been good.

Students were offered up to $100 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of other students who use or sell drugs. Since September 1982, the Dallas school paid out about $450 from funds raised by its Parent, Teacher and Student Association. At least 30 students were turned in. Fourteen were expelled and all face criminal charges.

But detractors say the program may have wider implications.

"Conceptually there's no difference between offering $100 to turn in somebody with a joint in their pocket than offering $100 for somebody who steals a hubcap or engages in illicit sex," Novik argued. "It's teaching children values which conflict with the principals and values embodied in the Constitution, values of freedom and privacy. It conflicts with some basic notions about how we deal with ourselves. There is also the concern of Hitler Youth-type spying and distrust."

Law enforcement officials, however, insist it is the atmosphere which makes the program click.

"It doesn't bother me that kids are turning in their best friends," Lewisville Police Chief Steve McFadden said. "I'm not interested in the politics of it. What they are doing is working. A doper turns in his best friend, and that's one less doper."

Youth admits two killings

Boy won't get adult trial

United Press International
CONROE — Despite a youth's admission of guilt, a judge has ruled the 14-year-old boy will not be tried as an adult in the deaths of his uncle and father.

The boy, whose name was withheld under Texas juvenile law, was arrested late Friday in Huntsville, 20 miles from where his grandfather, Travis Cantrell, found the bodies of his father and uncle in the home they shared near Willis.

The father, Riley Cantrell, 34, had been shot in the chest with a .410 shotgun and the uncle, Denton Cantrell, 35, had been shot and hacked with a double-edged axe.

Montgomery County Court at Law Judge Jerry Winfree ruled Monday after a 25-minute hearing at which the boy was present but did not testify. His grandmother, aunt and other friends and relatives joined him at the hearing.

Montgomery County Chief

Deputy Steve Graeter said the boy admitted the attack and that it appeared the boy was struggling with his uncle and his father walked in on the incident.

Although the youth gave authorities a statement, he is too young under Texas law to be tried or convicted as an adult.

Student found in trunk of car

United Press International
AMARILLO—A Texas Tech University student, who was found unconscious in the trunk of a car, was in satisfactory condition today recovering from injuries suffered in a struggle with her abductor, police said.

Beverly Jane Reed, 21, of Lubbock, was abducted from her apartment Sunday night by a man who tried to strangle her, then bound her hands and feet and locked her in the trunk of a car, police said.

An abandoned car was found Monday night by an officer from Tulia, Texas, about 70 miles south of Lubbock where the school is located, authorities said.

Tulia Police Chief Tom Rolen said the officer later found a man hiding in bushes near the abandoned car and took him into custody.

The car was towed back to the station and it was there officers heard whimpering sounds coming from the trunk," Rolen said. "The trunk was pried open and the girl was found nude and tied. She was rushed to the hospital in Amarillo (40 miles north of Tulia). The woman bore strangulation marks and extensive bruises."

Rolen said tests at the hospital showed the woman had not been sexually assaulted.

He said the man arrested at the scene was charged with aggravated kidnapping and bond for him was set at $75,000.

He was identified as Herman Ray Winniford, 25, a former Air Force sergeant and Texas Tech student.

Rolen said Winniford admitted to them that he tried to strangle the woman at her apartment. The police chief said the two were acquainted through classes they attended together.
