Major election role sought

Win inspires black leaders

United Press International
CHICAGO — Many of the nation's black leaders, inspired by the election of Harold Washington as the first black mayor of Chicago, are predicting a major role for minorities in next year's presidential election. Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind., said the Chicago outcome lends credence to his theory a black candidate could be elected vice president next year and president in 1988. Washington, 60, defeated Republican insurance millionaire Bernard Epton Tuesday in a cliffhanger that was deecided largely along racial lines. Washington got about 51.5 percent of the vote to Epton's 48.5 percent. Final totals will be determined by the official canvass late this week. Washington got huge percentages of the city's heavily black wards — 99.47 percent in one. Epton piled up huge margins in the white ethnic wards, with Hispanic and liberal white wards swinging the election to Washington, a second-term congressman. Washington moved quickly to contain the bigotry that often marred the campaign. He hosted an "ecumenical" luncheon Wednesday afternoon for Epton's brother, the two Democrats he beat in the Feb. 22 primary — Mayor Jane M. Byrne and State's Attorney Richard M. Daley — and the leaders of the city's clergy. Epton left Wednesday for a Florida vacation. He said as he boarded his plane he had sent his congratulations to Washington through telephone calls and a telegram. He wasn't thinking of helping the news media, however, particularly columnists. Epton said he plans to go to the Federal Communications Commission and "file every possible complaint I can make" as he pursues "litigation against every columnist I can find" who finds examples of racial libel in articles about his campaign. He mentioned no other examples. Others were looking beyond the governor's race during the next election. "I really believe it is substance to any challenge national office, whether presidency or vice president," Hatcher said.

B-52 wreckage found, seven crewmen killed

NELLIS AIR FORCE BASE, Nev. — Wreckage of the B-52 bomber that vanished during war games four days ago was found scattered on the Utah high desert, and military officials said all seven crew members perished. The Air Force worked to retrieve the bodies Thursday.

"There were no indications of survivors," Air Force spokesman William Williams said Wednesday night after searching specified portions of the wreckage and confirmed it was a missing aircraft. The plane crew were based at Robins in Georgia.
