

Court orders teen's release in manners case

United Press International
HOUSTON — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has ordered the release of a teenager who was jailed for 30 days for not saying "yes sir" to a judge, an appeals court clerk said.

The state appeals court Friday ordered Harris County jail officials to release Michael Washington, 18, on a $100 bond, chief clerk Troy Bennett said.

However, the county sheriff had not received the order late Friday, and Washington remained jailed.

The ruling was made as Washington served the 18th day of a 30-day sentence for addressing State District Judge Michael McSpadden with "yeah" after McSpadden had instructed Washington to say, "yes sir."

McSpadden said Washington failed to show proper respect to the court, so he tacked on a 30 day jail term to Washington's probationary sentence on a burglary conviction to teach the defendant some manners.

Washington's lawyer, Walter Gill, last week asked the judge to shorten his client's sentence. When the judge refused, Gill appealed to a higher court.

The appeals court instructed McSpadden to respond to the appeal by April 29, and said it would rule sometime thereafter whether the 30-day sentence was legal.

Man selling house to pay for liver transplant costs

United Press International
HOUSTON — Bill Brazier is selling his home to get a longer life.

The Houston man, 38, said he placed his home on the market in an effort to help defray the cost of an expensive liver transplant operation he hopes to receive in six months.

Brazier said Friday he was selling his Houston home because his insurance company would pay only 80 percent of the expected $60,000 hospital tab.

In addition, he said, the company said it could not pay for trips to the Pittsburgh hospital or his use of a costly anti-rejection drug, which must be used for the rest of his life.

To get the money for the medical bills, Brazier said he was placing his home on the market for about $80,000.

Generally, he said, it was easier for young children to find financial backing from corporate benefactors than it is for adults.

Woman arrested in alleged beer bootlegging operation

United Press International
GARLAND — A police undercover operation in a dry Dallas suburb has nailed a 62-year-old woman who investigators allege was bootlegging beer from her front porch at $5 a six-pack.

Oleta Arnold Cox was arrested after she accepted a $5 bill from a police detective and handed him a brown bag containing a cool six-pack, said police Lt. John Williams.

The bespectacled, gray-haired woman said she had been selling the beer to support herself and her son after he was injured in a wreck.

Twenty-nine cases of cold beer were seized during a raid at her home Thursday night, Williams said.

Cox, who was released from jail late Thursday on her own recognizance, faces a maximum penalty of 180 days in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Police said they began gating Cox about a month when several parents complained their high school children were buying beer in their neighborhood.

Officer W.M. Gandy Cox had customers wait on the front porch while she went inside to get beer.
