Feds want money back from misspent funds

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The federal government has asked the Supreme Court to clear the way for the Education Department to force Pennsylvania and New Jersey to repay $1.4 million in misspent education funds.

In a case that ultimately could affect many other states, including Texas, and other federal agencies, government lawyers urged the court Monday to overturn a lower court decision that found the department lacks the authority to collect the funds.

Kenneth Geller, lawyer for the government, argued that the Education Department had "an inherent right" to recoup federal funds it felt were spent improperly.

But lawyers for Pennsylvania and New Jersey said the department had received no specific authorization from Congress to force states to repay the money.

Joining Pennsylvania and New Jersey were 13 other states that the Education Department says has misspent education grants. Those states in addition to Texas are Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, California, Illinois, Hawaii, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon and Virginia.

The government is seeking repayment for federal funds given to states for the special needs of educationally deprived children. The program, inaugurated under Title I of the 1965 Elementary and Secondary Education Act, was designed for areas with high concentrations of children from low-income families.

However, in auditing state expenditures, the Education Department found that New Jersey and Pennsylvania had misspent the funds during fiscal years ranging from 1968 to 1973. The department found that money was not spent for the purposes designated by Congress.

The department asked New Jersey to refund $1 million and Pennsylvania to pay back $422,000. The states took the government to court, arguing that the department lacked the authority to recoup illegally expended funds.

A three-judge appeals court panel agreed, finding that the only express authority to order repayment of the misspent money was in 1978 amendments to the original 1965 act — amendments enacted after the disputed funds were spent.

The court also said the government could not offset the misspent funds by denying the states future educational money.

However, Geller said Congress over the years repeatedly had given federal agencies general authority to recoup federal funds that are misspent.

"It's like collecting on a contract that's been breached," Geller said.
