Soup can help you lose weight. A study shows that when you eat a bowl of soup you consume fewer calories that day than you normally would. University of Nebraska nutritionists and the Campbell Soup company say that since soup is usually eaten slowly, it's a "dietary pacemaker" that may help prevent a person from overeating.

Still spending dad's bucks

Teen shoppers big market

United Press International
NEW YORK — Teenagers are doing more shopping for themselves and their families these days — but still using their parents' money to pay the bills, a survey of youthful spending habits says.
Teen-Age Research Unlimited, which conducted the national survey, said "there's a lot in it to surprise advertisers and agencies."
Peter Zollo, TRU vice president, said it indicated teenagers "have been very underestimated for their influence over a number of consumer decisions."

Although the number of teenagers in the population is dropping, he said, "they continue to spend more each year," and to influence the buying habits of their families.
"Nearly half the girls said they had done some grocery shopping for the family in the past week, and 60 percent did other types of shopping," he said.
Almost 50 percent of the girls and 20 percent of the boys felt they influenced their parents' choice of clothing. About 46 percent of the boys — and 40 percent of the girls — said they had an impact on their parents' choice in cars.

"What I really think it says is that teenagers are important not only to the marketers of acne medicine and records, but a wide range of consumer products," Zollo said.
To get to them, advertisers apparently can choose between teen-oriented media and avenues that are popular with the nation as a whole.
According to the survey, high-rated television shows like "Hill Street Blues" and "Dynasty" are big with teens, along with two less popular shows that feature teenage themes — "Square Pegs" and "The Facts of Life."

The magazines they read regularly were "Teen," "Seventeen," "Illustrated," "Readers Digest," "Teen," "Time" and "People."
The market for personal computers is "far from saturated" among teenagers, a survey said. Only 28 percent said they had bought a personal computer within the last year, but 60 percent said they were planning to buy one within the next year.
Nearly half the teenagers said they worked more than five hours a week, and 25 percent said they received a regular allowance.
While more than 70 percent including 83 percent of the girls said they shopped for their clothes, only 28 percent of them with their own credit cards, and about 20 percent said they have bank accounts.
Teen-age Research Unlimited is a Lake Forest, Ill. subsidiary of Educational Communications Inc., which publishes Who's Who in American High Schools.
TRU sent questionnaires to a sample of 6,149 U.S. teens and tabulated results from responses randomly selected from the 2,435 returned.
Zollo said the method used to reduce input from poor readers and writers was not a group market targeting, he said.
Otherwise, Zollo claimed, the method should have produced responses that were fairly representative of American teens as a whole.
