Program to feature Aggie profs

by Jennifer Carr
Battalion Staff
Texas A&M will display its "arsenal" of talented professors next week when former students and friends of the University meet here for what Liberal Arts-Continuing Education coordinator Annie Ruth Taylor describes as a learning vacation. Aggie Wappenschaw, which means "weapons showing," is a four-day program featuring Texas A&M professors who are the best in their fields. The presentations will range from cartooning to archaeology to embryo transfer. Most presentations will include a tour of the professor's facility as well, Taylor said.

Learning vacations are held at universities across the country, Taylor said. Dr. Henry Pope, former continuing education coordinator, had tried to start a similar program here for several years. Three years ago, Taylor said, the continuing education office came up with a name and a plan for the program.

Originally, the office wanted to use "muster" in the program name but couldn't because of its special meaning here. Pope suggested "Wappenschaw," an old Scotch word.

While the first Aggie Wappenschaw was not a success, Taylor said, last year's effort was. Taylor said she hopes to make Wappenschaw another Aggie tradition.

Taylor said it's a chance for former students to see what is going on at Texas A&M. Participants pay a fee which includes room, board, transportation and all activities for the four days.

One of the two speakers who are not Texas A&M professors is James Michener.

Michener is the guest speaker from the University of Texas, where he is working on his latest book — about Texas. Michener's program will be a question-and-answer period moderated by Dr. David Stewart, head of the English department. Michener's program is the only one open to the public.

Texas A&M speakers include: James Earle, head of engineering design graphics, speaking on cartooning.

Nancy Jones, English lecturer, giving dramatic readings.

Duane Kraemer, professor of veterinary physiology and pharmacology, speaking on embryo transfer.

Gordon Hopkins, head of mechanical engineering, speaking on robotics.

Frank W.R. Hubert, assistant to the chancellor, giving an overview of Texas A&M from the 1960s to the present. James P. McGinnis, professor of meteorology, speaking on the use of long-range weather forecasting.

Rod O'Connor, former of the freshman chemistry program, speaking on the environment.

Aggie Wappenschaw begins Sunday, is open to those who have registered and paid the $485 fee.

The program is designed specifically for Texas A&M students and friends of the university, Taylor said, to give back to those who have given to the University about life

Dee Greenleaf has been named Manager and the staff expanded at the Command Performance salon in Post Oak Mall. Greenleaf was formerly Assistant Manager of the Command Performance salon in San Jacinto Mall in Baytown and also was on the staff of the company's Memorial City Mall salon in Houston. She pointed out that the staff expansion was necessitated by the enthusiastic acceptance of Command Performance by Bryan and College Station residents. "I've never seen such interest in Command Performance," she said. "I think our highly professional approach to complete hair care service is the biggest reason for our success. We believe in listening to each client to determine their exact hair needs, and that seems to be important to people," she explained. "And," Greenleaf concluded, "we know people appreciate our filling all their hair care needs, from simple trimming and cutting through styling, coloring and perms."

Question and answer program to feature author Michener

by Jennifer Carr

James Michener, Pulitzer prize-winning author of more than 30 books, will hold an informal question-and-answer session at Texas A&M Tuesday as part of a program presented by Liberal Arts-Continuing Education.

The program, co-sponsored by MSC Great Issues, is a part of Aggie Wappenschaw, an annual "learning vacation" for former students and friends of the University. It will be held at 9:15 a.m. in Rudder Forum. It is the only Wappenschaw program open to the public.

Annie Ruth Taylor, coordinator of Liberal Arts-Continuing Education, said she decided to open Michener's program to the entire University community because of the timeliness of the speaker. When she learned Great Issues did not have a summer speaker, she approached them about co-sponsoring Michener's talk.

Michener, 75, is currently working on a novel about Texas at the University of Texas. He is known for his intricate depiction of diverse societies and cultures.

In his novels, he emphasizes the need to overcome ignorance and prejudice by explaining other cultures and their aspirations.

Michener began his writing career with the Pulitzer prize-winning "Tales of the South Pacific" after serving on 49 islands in the South Pacific in the U.S. Navy. The book was later made into the Pulitzer prize-winning musical "South Pacific."

Michener's other works include: "Sayonora," "Hawaii," "The Voice of Asia," "The Source," "Iberia," "The Covenant," "The Fires of Spring,"

"Caravans," "Chesapeake" and "The result of Michener's work at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Board.

Michener also is a public service and has served as cultural ambassador to several countries. In 1982 he participated in a United States-sponsored cultural exchange program. He has received more than 20 honorary degrees in five fields and is one of the country's leading un-

FBI denies action against survivalists

United Press International
LITTLE ROCK — Reports of a planned nationwide crackdown by the FBI on Posse Comitatus, a right-wing organization of tax protesters and militant survivalists, have been flatly denied by FBI agents in Arkansas.

The Kansas City Times reported Tuesday that the legal framework for the nationwide crackdown against Posse Comitatus was laid quietly during the four months that group member Gordon Kahl, 63, remained a fugitive. Kahl died Friday night in a shootout with law officers in rural Lawrence County, Ark.

The copyright article said federal law enforcement sources have acknowledged that the group has, in effect, been singled out by the FBI and federal prosecutors. It also said the group had eight to 10 encampments in northern Arkansas.

Little Rock FBI agent Ray McElhane, however, said Tuesday that the report "is just not true" from the FBI's standpoint.

"The FBI is not conducting a nationwide or an Arkansas state-wide investigation of Posse Comitatus. And we have not been," McElhane said. "We haven't been conducting any investigation of this organization or any other."

McElhane said the FBI investigated Kahl as an individual in the shooting deaths of two federal marshals in North Dakota in February.

"The fact that he allegedly belonged to a particular group has been and continues to be irrelevant to that investigation," McElhane said.

He said the arrest of Leonard and Norma Ginter on federal charges of harboring a fugitive also had nothing to do with any affiliation with Posse Comitatus. The Ginters, who lived in the bunker-like home where the shootout occurred, also have been charged with capital murder by prosecutors in Lawrence County.

Lawrence County Sheriff Gene Matthews led a raid on the residence near Imboden, Ark., Friday evening and confronted Kahl, who died of a gunshot wound to the head. Matthews was wounded in the incident and died three hours later.

Officials at the state's Forensic Laboratory said Tuesday that toxic reports on the wounds of the slain Kahl were incomplete.

Examiner Dr. Fahm has said the gun used to match the type carried by Matthews, and who is believed Kahl fired the shot that killed the sheriff.

The body of Kahl, who was identified by his high school officials and will be buried in Little Rock said Tuesday.
