Task Force suggests student enrollment will severely tax their limited classroom

United Press International AUSTIN — Immigration reform that includes a general amnesty for illegal aliens could cause a strain on South Texas schools which already have limited resources, a report on immigration warned Tuesday. For that reason, the Governor's Task Force on Immigration recommended increased federal funding for states and border cities that will have to provide additional public services such as education, medical care and welfare.

The 50-page report said Texas and its border cities and counties should be protected from any "unanticipated" budget increases. 'The situation is so severe for some school districts that even a relatively small increase to their space," the report said. Border school districts, it added, have difficulty building new schools and recruiting bilingual teachers who are often lured to better financed urban school districts. The preliminary report was commissioned by Gov. Mark White as Texas' official position on the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1983, which is pending in Congress.

The 28-member task force drafted the report after hearing testimony from more than 200 people during public hearings in seven Texas cities during the last three months. A final report will be issued Oct. 1. The report also said if Texas employers are to be penalized
