Houston metropolitan area will record the largest population and employment increases in the nation between now and the year 2000, with Dallas close behind, a national planning group predicts.

The surges in the two cities will key growth in Texas, which will see the state grow almost twice as fast as the remainder of the country and attain the nation's second largest population and working force by the year 2000, the National Planning Association predicted Sunday. 'The Texas population will expand by 4.5 million people, reaching 18.8 million and re-placing New York as the country's second-most-populous state by the year 2000," the nonprofit agency said.

"Over the next 20 years, the state's population is expected to increase almost twice as fast as the nation's — 32 percent com-pared to 18 percent," NPA officials said.

California is expected to remain the nation's most popu-lated state with 29 million residents by the year 2000 and 16.1 million jobs.

However, the group said there will be 10.2 million jobs in Texas at the end of the 1980-2000 period with employment skyrocketing by 47 percent

The while the national rate goes up only 27 percent. Washington-based The group said overall it expects Texas' population to grow by 1.4 percent annually while employment goes up 2 percent over the period

Leading the way nationally in population and job increases will be Houston, the organization said. Texas' largest city will add 1.3 million people and 1.1 million jobs during the 20-year period. Dallas' population will go up by 800,000, and jobs will in-crease by 700,000, the group said

Statewide, over half the new jobs are expected to be in the services, trade and finance sectors with employment in those areas increasing 69 percent over the next 20 years. "At the turn of the century, the increase in services employ-ment alone — 1 million jobs will be almost three times the increase in Texas manufacturing employment — 360,000," the group said.

The group said overall it expects services and finance em-ployment to grow by 3.3 percent each year while manufacturing job growth goes up only 1.5 per-cent annually.

Despite the outcry from citizens of the western Kansas town of 17,800, various groups and the Kansas attorney gener-reserve the First Amendment and the Kansas attorney gener-al, FCC rules allow the couple's Cattle County Broadcasting to continue operating KTTL until the controversy is resolved even though its license expired

June 1 Just last week, Kansas Attor-ney General Robert Stephan cited fears of violence against the public and private citizens in urging the FCC to act quickly. But Mark Solberg, an attor-ney with the FCC's FM branch, said hearings on the complaints and a proposal to buy the license are still months away, and court appeals could take years to re-solve.

Meanwhile, Babbs, 49, a farmwife, grandmother and tax protester, plans to continue operating KTTL and its primarily automated programming. She is blocked from selling it un-quietly operated the only country-western music station - one of only four broadcast outlets in the town.

But then began the one-hour nightly taped messages by two men associated with the Posse Comitatus — a paramilitary group of tax protesters who only follow their Latin name of "law of the county.

The broadcasts attacked blacks, Indians, Asians, Hispanics, politicians, the Internal Revenue Service, judges, lawyers but mostly Jews. Kansas, citing a paramilitary training session, fears of viobut mostly Jews.

protests, including letters that say Babbs said she believed the tapes and only stopped running them in February because she ran out Babbs claims that people want to take away her free speech rights and believe "there's a Posse Comitatus under every bush.'

The loosely knit group was thrust into national prominence by Gordon Kahl, a tax protester who died last month, and an Arkansas sheriff who tried to arrest him and also was killed. Kahl had been wanted in the February slayings of two federal marshals in North Dakota.

Kansas law officials have been closely monitoring the Posse in For some time the station also lence by Posse members who added nightly one-hour tapes by "the Rev. James Wickstrom" of and bomb threats.
