Camp gives ill kids hope

United Press International GAINESVILLE — It's called "Esperanza," Spanish for hope, and is the gift of country air and sunshine to 68 seriously ill children from a man whose disease killed him.

Esperanza is a north Texas camp for young cancer patients. "Some of the children attending the camp need a form of chemotherapy," said Peggy Sartain, a doctor at the Children's Medical Center in Dallas and camp counselor. "Several have completed their course of treatment."

Camp expenses were underwritten by a legacy from Robert Bridewell, a Dallas businessman, 41, who died last year of cancer. He bequeathed money to give young cancer patients an opportunity to sleep under the stars, hike and fish.

Not all greeted the country life with enthusiasm. "I don't like worms," lamented Paula Marshall, 7, suffering from an acute form of leukemia. "I think they're nasty."

Camp coordinator Sally Francis said, "This is the first camping opportunity for many of the children. A first chance for some to get to know other children with cancer."

"Although they may cross paths at the clinic, it's not the type of environment where the kids can build friendships," she said.

The one-week term Camp Esperanza last week was such a success, she said, the Children's Medical Center plans to expand the program to two weeks next year.

Kemp said the camp gave the young patients a chance to be children. "They (parents) doubt their

(the children's) capabilities and restrict them athletically and mentally," she said. "The staff here is well-trained and our activities with the kids are flexible."

"We want to teach them something in one week," she said, "to feel accomplished, to make decisions. The parents will just have to find out after the fact."

Camp activities included arts and crafts, canoeing, archery and fishing.

Glenn Hillhouse, 11, counts himself lucky for hooking a fish the first day of camp. The sixth-grader, undergoing treatment for Ewing's sarcoma, a rare form of bone marrow cancer, said he can't wait to return next year to improve his record.

"I'm really excited about being here."

Teller machine delayed pending traffic study

by Tim Ward
Battalion Reporter

Concern over traffic problems has delayed the Brazos Savings Association's plans for an automatic teller machine at Texas Avenue and Millers Lane.

The College Station Planning and Zoning Commission has asked for further study of traffic patterns at the Millers Lane site and at the College Station branch of Brazos Savings at Southwest Parkway and Texas Avenue.

The request was made at last

Thursday's commission meeting during which two other Brazos Savings proposals were approved with modifications.

The commission approved construction of a 12-lane driveway facility in the Ashford Square subdivision. The approval was tagged with the fire marshal's recommendation of widening the proposed nine-foot wide lanes to 20 feet, to give emergency vehicles easy access.

The commission also approved expansion plans for the Brazos Savings College Station building, at Millers Lane and Texas Avenue. The building is a Handicapped parking designated in the original plan. The commission ordered two parking spaces be for the handicapped.

In other action, the commission approved the rezoning of lots 1 and 2 of Forest Phase I and Phase II. The commission also approved plan for the expansion of Treehouse Village Apartments between Luther Street and Lemman Drive in Wood-

Police say man held captive before murder

United Press International HOUSTON — A man, 17, found shot to death in the nude apparently was bound and held captive more than 10 hours before being killed, police said.

Mark Huffman was found about 10:15 p.m. Friday in an empty lot. He had been shot twice in the head. Police said Noel Spall, 24, was charged with murder Saturday night.

Police said another man and woman arrested at the scene of the shooting believed Huffman burglarized the apartment they shared with Spall in northeast

Harris County Thursday night. Detective D.B. Roberts quoted the man and woman as saying Huffman had come to their apartment late Friday morning and said he heard their apartment was burglarized. They told him they had told no one about the break in.

Detectives said the man, woman and a male roommate coaxed Huffman into admitting he stole some jewelry, then bound his hands and feet with electrical tape.

"They told him they were going to wait until dark and then take him to the county jail to leave him there," Roberts said. "He apparently believed we were really going to let him go later and didn't try to escape."

Roberts said the allegedly took Huffman to a vacant lot and Spall and another man stripped Huffman and shot him with a .38-caliber pistol.

Police said Spall fled on foot but was arrested hours later. Spall's room was searched after he was released after questioning by police said.

Fines for loitering raised to fight prostitution increase

United Press International AUSTIN — Arrest records indicate prostitutes from all parts of the country have been practicing their trade in the capitol city, and police have responded by increasing fines and beefing up street patrols.

According to Austin Police Capt. Gilbert Miller, there were more prostitution-related arrests in the first half of 1983 than in all of 1982.

He said female officers would begin acting as decoys to arrest males who solicit prostitutes. In addition, the bond for people caught loitering, a frequent charge against prostitutes who are not caught openly soliciting, was raised from $36 to $156.

"We've had numerous complaints from people who've been harassed and solicited by them," Miller said. "In one case, they solicited a group of Boy Scouts. We've also had reports of them soliciting men who were downtown with their wives and children."

Municipal Judge Aquilar said many of the tickets were coming in because they heard fines were low. Until July, charged with loitering and released from jail after the $36 bond.

Miller said he was arrested came from Texas cities and some states.
