

Mexican government debates immigration

United Press International
EL PASO — Mexico, a persistent critic of United States immigration policies, now finds itself locked in its own immigration debate.

In recent years, Mexico has become home to an estimated 200,000 Central Americans and the government is divided over whether to welcome them or boot them out, said Sergio Aguayo, professor of international studies at Colegio de Mexico in Mexico City.

The government has opted for an "acceptable but ambiguous" posture toward the refugees, Aguayo said Monday during a lecture at UT El Paso sponsored by the Center for Inter-American and Border Studies.

Mexico's President Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado has steered a middle course. Aguayo said, while the country tries to clarify its policy.

Mexican immigration policy has been clear toward the 50,000 Guatemalan refugees living in the state of Chiapas in southern Mexico, Aguayo said. They have been given food and shelter when possible and helped to settle.

But, he said, the policy toward the Central Americans mostly from El Salvador living in the interior of Mexico, has been vague.

Part of the problem is that there is no concept of a refugee under Mexican law, Aguayo said. Individuals can and are given political asylum based on the merits of their cases but not whole groups of people, he said.

Teacher strikes go on, more walkouts possible

United Press International
Striking teachers disrupted school for more than 100,000 students in five states and a strike authorization vote in Chicago could close classrooms for 439,000 students in the nation's third largest district next month.

Strikes affected 104,800 students in Michigan, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Washington. The strikes were centered on demands by teachers for higher wages and smaller classes.

The Chicago Teachers Union's 28,000 members were to vote Thursday on whether to authorize a strike Oct. 3. CTU President Robert Healey predicted a big turnout, which he said would indicate teachers' willingness to strike for higher wages.

Teachers were already on strike in three Illinois school districts — Crete-Monee, Grayslake and Blue Island — affecting 8,860 students.

In Pennsylvania, a new strike flared in the Delaware County school district of Garnet Valley Wednesday, making a total of three strikes by 320 teachers statewide, affecting more than 5,500 students. Quick settlements appeared unlikely.

In addition, teachers in the West Middlesex School District in Mercer County, about 45 miles northwest of Pittsburgh, threatened to strike Monday if no agreement was reached with school administrators by midnight Sunday.

East Allegheny School District in Allegheny County and in the Borough, Bucks County.

A Superior Court judge ordered striking Pawtucket, R.I., teachers back to work Wednesday. School officials said it will be at least Monday before about 1,000 students see an end to their tending summer vacation.

Michigan remained the hardest hit by the school walkouts with more than 2,400 teachers in 11 districts walked picket lines, killing 100 students.

MONTAGUE — A judge expects to order a trial to begin next month in either Amarillo or Henrietta for the first of six slayings in which confessed mass murderer Henry Lee Lucas is charged.

State District Judge Frank Douthitt said the trial would begin Oct. 17 if it were moved to Amarillo or Oct. 18 if it were moved to Henrietta. His announcement is expected next week.

Douthitt ruled Wednesday that Lucas could not receive a fair trial in Montague County, where he is charged in the slaying of Kate Rich, 80, of Ringgold.

She disappeared in September 1982. Her remains were found June 16 in a culvert near Ringgold, and bones and ashes were found in Lucas' stove at nearby Stoneburg, Texas.

The trial originally was scheduled for Tuesday.

Lucas, a former mental patient, has told authorities he killed more than 100 women in 17 states between 1975. He has been charged with slayings of six women in Texas.

Lucas already is scheduled to stand trial Oct. 17 in Georgetown and Denton on two other charges. Douthitt said the Montague County charge would be the first.

Douthitt said he would move the trial to Henrietta, Montague County — adjacent to Montague County. The judge said he is adamant about bringing the trial as soon as possible.

Douthitt rejected defenses that the state not be allowed to use as evidence Lucas' confession or the ashes and bones.

However, Douthitt said that prosecutors could not introduce evidence seized from Lucas' home and apartment because the trial was taken without a warrant.

Additionally, defense attorneys filed motions serving notice might pursue an insanity plea for Lucas in the Rich slaying.
