Strictly Tamoo

by Cathy Smith

Battalion reporter

Strictly Tamoo, a jazz ensemble composed of Texas A&M students and former students, is named after a club in Dallas, the band's founder says.

Armando Canales, the founder, spent a lot of time at a jazz club named "Strictly Tabu." The name of his band began as "Strictly TAMU" but was changed to "Tamoo" to avoid copyright violations, Canales says.

The band formed two years ago when Canales sent out fliers to find people interested in forming a jazz band. The response was enormous, Canales said. Band membership has fluctuated over the years. Today's Tamoo is composed of Canales and four others who all belong to the Texas A&M Jazz Band.

The group has played at weddings, clubs and the Miss Texas A&M Scholarship Pageant. The band's favorite performance was for a retirement party last year, Canales said.

"We had a 70-year-old man dancing in front of the band," drummer Jeff Burris said.

Tamoo performs about once a month and tries to play as much as possible, Burris said.

The group calls itself a jazz ensemble but will play whatever is called for, said Burris, an environmental design major.

"We're slaves to our audience," he said.

Tamoo has no set fee for performances. The cost covers their expenses, and then they charge whatever seems fair, depending on distance and length of the performance. Money is not as important as getting to play, the members agree.

All members of the band have played a lot, with at least seven years of experience each. Canales, the self-taught founder, has played for 12 years. Joe Warner, keyboard-player, has played for 15 years. He majors in petroleum engineering. Burris took private lessons for two years and has played the drums for seven years. Dave Purcell plays percussion, trumpet, flugelhorn and flute, and has been playing for 12 years. Purcell graduated from Texas A&M with a geophysics degree and works in Houston. Tarek Amer, bassist, is working on his master's of business administration here.

They all enjoy playing locally and enjoy their chances to meet and play with other bands. Canales, who writes jazz music for the group, has friends who play in Houston clubs, and Tamoo hopes to audition and play there sometime.

Surplus sells big

United Press International

NEW YORK — Americans live in a disposable society, where today's trend is tomorrow's yawn and last year's Christmas present is long since out of style.

Thank heavens, says Dennis Carlson, who has made a career out of recycling the brand-new rejects of a fickle culture.

Carlson is president of C.O.M.B. Co., a Minneapolis based liquidator that buys up manufacturers' surplus stock and resells it direct to consumers.

"The man who created the surplus business in the first place may have been Henry Ford, with the idea of built-in obsolescence, creating a new model every year," Carlson said.

A researcher once told Carlson the average 10-speed bicycle bought in the late 70s was used only three times before it was stashed away in the attic. Carlson, who liquidated about 180,000, believes him.
