United Press HOUSTON — turned meandering rivers and roads Monday, sweeping flooding homes and forcing people to flee from their homes. An unidentified boy apparently drowned in the morning storm has not been found later.

Meanwhile, a team probed a bayou after a report it had been swept away.

Earlier, a boy reported to the Defense to be swept away from a bridge over Bray's Bayou was found to have been swept away.

Widespread flooding in low-lying areas and bayou-lined bayous overflowed. Bray's Bayou, which carries part of the intercoastal system that carries oil from the Houston Ship Channel, was overflowing. Heavy rains associated with the storm dumped on San Antonio, causing flooding. Josie Quisenberry tried to escape her home with her cousins, age 1 and 2, but they were rescued. They said the boy was pregnant.

In a dramatic early Monday morning, a line of people holding a line from Gessner Street to Bayou swam into the bayou. They brought up Jessie Quisenberry, who had gone rafting on the bayou. She had warnings and had been rescued. Seven inches of rain fell in the area west of Wharton west of Houston, filling the bayou west to east across the bayou. The heaviest rain that fell down in the predicted morning rush hour.
