Water officials say El Paso not frugal

United Press International
EL PASO — A Texas Department of Water Resources official said El Paso water officials are setting an example for the rest of the state in water conservation, but the city is still not doing enough.

The remarks came at the end of a hearing Tuesday to develop suggestions for the state water planning guide to be adopted by the Texas Water Development Board.

The El Paso hearing is one of several being held throughout the state to get input for the guide, called, "Water for Texas, Planning for the Future."

"El Paso will have to become more frugal" with the water resources available, said Dr. Herbert Grubb, director of planning for the State Water Resources Department, adding that the city-instituted water conservation programs are helpful.

El Paso, he said, has limited sources of water available, unlike eastern parts of Texas, and most conserve.

A University of Texas at El Paso scientist suggested the city store water in northern New Mexico reservoirs rather than Elephant Butte Reservoir which has a high evaporation rate. Elephant Butte is located about 120 miles north of El Paso.

Richard Marston of the Geological Sciences Department also suggested that the city be allowed credit for putting water into the Rio Grande from urban storm water runoff. El Paso now gets credit for adding water to the river from treated sewage effluent.

The amount of water which goes into the river effects the amount of allotment under existing federal agreements, officials said. El Paso draws water from the river during the summer months, purifies it and pumps it into the city's water supply.

Farmers may face fines for smuggling

United Press International
DEL RIO — A north Texas couple, who federal officials say smuggled illegal aliens to work on their egg farm, face up to $36,000 in fines if a plea bargain filed this week is approved.

A hearing was scheduled next Monday for Ernest "Sonny" Mahard and his wife, Helen, owners of the Mahard Egg Corp. in Prosper.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Dan Maeso of San Antonio said Tuesday the couple had signed an agreement to enter guilty pleas on all 10 counts filed against the corporation in exchange for having charges filed against them dropped.

A Del Rio grand jury handed down the 10-count indictment in June, charging the Mahards with transporting and conspiring to transport illegal aliens to their farm, located about 40 miles north of Dallas.

William Chambers of the Immigration and Naturalization Service office in Dallas said the Mahards allegedly paid from $200 to $350 per worker to have Mexican workers shipped to Prosper.

"Since January of this year, we have arrested 179 illegal aliens on their premises," Chambers said.

He said he did not know how many illegal workers had been funneled through what he called the Mahard "pipeline."

"All I can say is they have brought in large numbers of aliens and have paid for their transportation," he said.

Chambers said the Mahards paid other people to bring the Mexican workers north, then deducted the cost from their wages.

"This is a normal practice, a bondage-type situation," he said. "Last August the INS in Florida picked up an alien who said he had worked on a chicken farm north of Dallas. They had kept him there because he owed them money for transportation, and they wouldn't let him leave."

"We were satisfied that he was talking about the Mahards," Chambers said.

Maeso said his office had also requested the Occupational Safety and Health Administration investigate the Mahards "in connection with the living conditions of these people (illegals)."

Bill: Don't consider appointees' party

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Two Democratic senators, one citing Missouri dioxin concerns, Tuesday introduced a bill to block administrations from considering political affiliation in appointing scientists to nonpartisan advisory boards.

Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri and Dale Bumpers of Arkansas introduced the measure that also would prohibit political appointees from inquiring about the political affiliations of candidates to nonpartisan scientific advisory groups.

Eagleton said newspaper accounts indicate the administration has politicized "ostensibly non-partisan appointments" in the Environmental Protection Agency, Federal Drug Administration, Agriculture Department and Department of Interior.

"Newspaper reports make it clear that this administration has required — to an extent unprecedented by any previous administration — a litmus test of party loyalty as a prerequisite for appointment of scientists," he said.

Eagleton especially cited the EPA's naming of Harvard biochemist Dr. Matthew Meselson on a "hit list" of politically unacceptable scientists and describing him as "poison — he is a Nader on toxics."

The bill would amend the Federal Advisory Committee Act "to prevent this kind of distortion of the selection process," he said.

Mother fears missing son a murder victim

United Press International
EL PASO — A Fort Bliss Marine captain and his wife who went backpacking in Idaho are dead, the victims of a bizarre wilderness group which murders people, the soldier's mother said.

Gilda Howard said Tuesday Capt. Robert Bravence, 28, and Cheryl, 26, failed to return from their trip to the Nez Perce National Forest by way of her Scottsdale, Ariz., home June 28 or 29.

Bravence has been missing from the base since he failed to report to work July 2.

"We have to be realistic," she said. "We know they're dead. We know what goes on out there. There are groups of people out there that are murdering people on the trails."

Bravence works in the Marine Corps Administrative Detachment at Fort Bliss, where he teaches soldiers how to fire the HAWK (Homing All-the-Way Killer) anti-aircraft missile.

Bravence's commanding officer, Col. William Speights, said Bravence has a lot of responsibility and "was doing a superb job."

man, was a substitute teacher in one of the El Paso schools last year. She was to begin teaching the second grade full time this fall. The couple has no children.

Officials say evidence indicates kidnapping and foul play. On June 21, an area resident saw the Bravences' Volkswagen camper at the Kamiah campsite near Grangeville. There were no people in it, but the couple's Siberian husky was in it.

Three days later the same resident went by the campsite. He found the dog tied to a tree, but no vehicle.

On June 22, Bravence's Master Charge credit card was used in Oregon. Police said it was used illegally, but gave no details.

On July 5, the VW was found abandoned in a skid row section of Los Angeles. It contained a few camping articles, but no personal items, Los Angeles officials reported. The vehicle did not show bloodstains, damage or other signs of foul play.

The FBI, National Forest Service and law enforcement agencies throughout the West are investigating the case, Henderson said.
