Abortions now less risky than birth, specialists say

United Press International
Boston — More and more women are undergoing abortions, and the risk of death and serious complications from abortions is plummeting, thanks to improved techniques, researchers say.
Specialists at the Centers of Disease Control in Atlanta conclude from recent statistics that the risk of death from abortion is now seven times lower than the risk of death as a result of childbirth.
"Methods and practices have improved so much," said Dr. David Grimes of the CDC in a report in the New England Journal of Medicine.
"It's a combination of things. As more procedures are performed, doctors are more practiced. We have safer methods now. And women are having abortions earlier in their pregnancy. And generally the earlier the abortion, the safer."

An estimated 1.2 million women have abortions each year in the nation — a third of them are teenagers.
A recent new study reported that teenage girls, contrary to the opinion of many, actually have a lower death rate from abortion than older women. Researchers say that the lower teen death rate presumably is because being younger, they can better handle any complications that arise.
And CDC statistics showed that for women of all ages, the risk of death has fallen significantly in the past decade.
In 1972, 4.1 deaths were reported per 100,000 legal abortions. In 1978 it was down to below 2 reported deaths per 100,000 abortions. And for teenage girls the rate is 1.3 deaths per 100,000 abortions.

Rates of serious complication, including the need for emergency surgery, also dropped throughout the 1970s.

"We are led to believe that abortion is substantially safer," Grimes said. "In the last decade there have been some 9 million abortions and doctors are getting better at treating them with the more practice and also improved technology."
Doctors say that 90 percent of abortions in the first three months are now performed via the suction-curettage method.

Under that method, the cervix or mouth of the womb is opened and a vacuum-type device sucks out the fetus. In earlier times, doctors used forceps-type devices to remove the fetus.

"The new technology is being used to make abortions safer," Grimes said.

In addition, doctors are using new methods to open the cervix including a Japanese sea stalk that stretches the cervix with less danger than rods.

The report said abortion-inducing labor through drug salt-solutions generally are used widely in later pregnancy. Such labor-induced abortions have higher complication rates.
"A very important thing to remember too," Grimes said, "is that women now generally have abortions earlier in pregnancy. And there are complications when it's earlier."

Golf ball, tee tower erected; promotion starts

United Press International
RUNAWAY BAY — Because of the new water tower, golfing and guessing have become the primary diversions in Runaway Bay.

Residents are celebrating the completion this week of a water tower and Mayor Ray Ratliff has launched a contest to publicize the town's step forward. Because the water tower is on the town's 18-hole golf course and is shaped and painted like a golf ball, Ratliff decided to have an appropriate contest.

"I went to the engineering department of Southern Methodist University and they figured out how many standard balls 1.75 inches in diameter will take to fill the giant golf tank," said Ratliff, who also owns a business in the Dallas suburb Addison.
"I will give you a hint — it's the millions," he said. "Anyone who can guess the right number or come close to it will win a weekend for two at an Add hotel, all expenses paid."

"We designed the tower this way because the residents play golf," said Ratliff. "It's 4 green of our golf course"
