Reagan offers new arms package

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, saying the Soviet Union has yet to take "the first meaningful step" on nuclear disarmament, sent his negotiating team back to Geneva Wednesday with a package of proposals that includes a call for the United States and the Soviet Union to destroy two existing nuclear missiles for every new one produced.

Reagan said that "throughout the negotiating process, it is the United States who has had to push, pull, probe and prod in the effort to achieve any progress" in the arms negotiations.

Reagan discussed the new proposals with a group of congressmen before meeting with chief U.S. arms negotiator Edward Rowny to give him his marching orders. The fifth round of the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks opens Thursday in Geneva.

Reagan appointed R. James Woolsey, a Democrat, to be a member-at-large of the U.S. delegation to warn the Soviets that the president has bipartisan backing for his actions.

Woolsey, former undersecretary of the Navy, will keep an eye on the negotiations to determine whether they are being pursued by the Reagan team.

The main feature of the new proposals is the guaranteed build-down that provides for the superpowers to eliminate two older missiles for each new one that is produced.

The proposal also includes provisions for cutting down on ballistic missile warheads and a parallel reduction of bombers.

"Let me emphasize the United States has gone the extra mile," Reagan said. "Everything is on the table. We are still most concerned about limits on the fast-flying, most dangerous systems. But we are also prepared to negotiate limits on the bomber and air launched cruise missile limits below SALT II levels." Reagan said the U.S. has tried to address Soviet concerns, but the Soviets have yet to take their first meaningful step to address ours.

He accused the Soviets of "stonewalling" U.S. proposals, not only in the START negotiations but also in the talks to reduce intermediate range missiles in Europe.

The watchwords of the new START proposal were "flexibility" and "bipartisanship."

Both Democrats and Republicans said Reagan had gone far in integrating ideas from Capitol Hill with the recommendations of his own advisers in shaping the package to be offered to the Soviet Union this week.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., praised Reagan for his attempt to involve Congress in arms control policymaking, even though he conceded the motivation may have been to win greater support for the MX missile and other parts of the administration's national security agenda.

Money doesn't stop traffic

SAN BRUNO, Calif. — Surprised police investigators said that when two bank robbers tossed hundreds of dollars out of their getaway car, only one motorist stopped — and he wasn't after the loot.

The bandits were apparently trying to create a traffic jam that would slow down police cars that were chasing them at speeds greater than 100 miles per hour down a busy freeway.

Instead, the driver who stopped stood guard over a simulated bomb the men had also thrown from the car, Police Capt. Tony Conti said Tuesday.

"It was a ploy to distract everybody," said Police Sgt. Joe Lanthier.

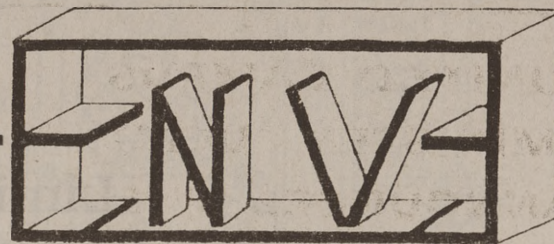

Labor worker denies bribe

CHARLESTON — A U.S. Department of Labor employee pleaded innocent Tuesday to a charge of soliciting a $5,000 bribe in exchange for processing and approving a black lung compensation claim.

Edward L. Workman entered the plea during an arraignment before U.S. Magistrate Jerry Hogg. He remains free on $10,000 unsecured bond.

Workman, an employee of the labor department's black lung benefits section, allegedly solicited the bribe in September from Elwood Sloan, a former coal miner who contacted the FBI.

A Dec. 5 trial date was set before federal District Judge Charles Haden, said Rick Glasier, an assistant U.S. attorney.
